5 [Plaintiff]¹ is suing under Section 1983, a civil rights law passed by Congress that provides 6 a remedy to persons who have been deprived of their federal [constitutional] [statutory] rights
7 under color of state law.²

² In these instructions, references to action under color of state law are meant to include action under color of territorial law. See, e.g., Eddy v. Virgin Islands Water & Power Auth., 955 F. Supp. 468, 476 (D.V.I. 1997) (“The net effect of the Supreme Court decisions interpreting 42 U.S.C. § 1983, including Will v. Michigan Department of State Police, 491 U.S. 58 (1989),] and Ngiraingas v. Sanchez, 495 U.S. 182 (1990), is to treat the territories and their officials and employees the same as states and their officials and employees.”), reconsidered on other grounds, 961 F. Supp. 113 (D.V.I. 1997); see also Iles v. de Jongh, 638 F.3d 169, 177-78 (3d Cir. 2011) (analyzing official-capacity claims against Governor of Virgin Islands under, inter alia, Will).

9 Comment

10
11 The plaintiff bears the burden of proof on the elements of a Section 1983 claim. See, e.g.,
12 Groman v. Township of Manalapan, 47 F.3d 628, 638 (3d Cir. 1995). The court can use Instruction 13 1.10 to apprise the jury of this burden.

15 Where there is a jury question on the issue of qualified immunity, some additional 16 instruction on burdens may occasionally be necessary.

18 Although the defendant has the burden of pleading the defense of qualified immunity, see
19 Gomez v. Toledo, 446 U.S. 635, 640 (1980); Thomas v. Independence Tp., 463 F.3d 285, 293 (3d 20 Cir. 2006),³ the Supreme Court has not definitively established who bears the burden of proof with 21 respect to that defense, see, e.g., Gomez, 446 U.S. at 642 (Rehnquist, J., concurring) (construing 22 the opinion of the Court “to leave open the issue of the burden of persuasion, as opposed to the 23 burden of pleading, with respect to a defense of qualified immunity”).

25 The Third Circuit has stated that the defendant bears the burden of proof on qualified
26 immunity. See, e.g., Burns v. PA Dep’t of Corrections, 642 F.3d 163, 176 (3d Cir. 2011)
27 (defendant has burden to establish entitlement to qualified immunity); Kopec v. Tate, 361 F.3d
28 772, 776 (3d Cir. 2004) (same); Beers-Capitol v. Whetzel, 256 F.3d 120, 142 n.15 (3d Cir. 2001)
29 (same); Karnes v. Skrutski, 62 F.3d 485, 491 (3d Cir. 1995) (same); Stoneking v. Bradford Area
30 Sch. Dist., 882 F.2d 720, 726 (3d Cir. 1989) (same); Ryan v. Burlington County, N.J., 860 F.2d 31 1199, 1204 n.9 (3d Cir. 1988) (same). However, some other Third Circuit opinions suggest that

³ See Sharp v. Johnson, 669 F.3d 144, 158-59 (3d Cir. 2012) (noting “that parties should generally assert affirmative defenses early in the litigation,” but finding no abuse of discretion in trial court’s permission to assert qualified immunity defense at trial where the defense had been pleaded and where the failure to present the defense by motion prior to trial made sense – due to the need for fact development – and did not prejudice the plaintiff).

4.2 Section 1983 – Burden of Proof

1 the burden of proof regarding qualified immunity may vary with the element in question.⁴ For 2 example, the court has stated that “[w]here a defendant asserts a qualified immunity defense in a
3 motion for summary judgment, the plaintiff bears the initial burden of showing that the defendant’s
4 conduct violated some clearly established statutory or constitutional right. . . . Only if the plaintiff
5 carries this initial burden must the defendant then demonstrate that no genuine issue of material 6 fact remains as to the ‘objective reasonableness’ of the defendant’s belief in the lawfulness of his 7 actions.” Sherwood v. Mulvihill, 113 F.3d 396, 399 (3d Cir. 1997); see also Hynson By and 8 Through Hynson v. City of Chester, 827 F.2d 932, 935 (3d Cir. 1987) (“Although the officials 9 claiming qualified immunity have the burden of pleading and proof . . . , a plaintiff who seeks 10 damages for violation of constitutional rights may overcome the defendant official’s qualified 11 immunity only by showing that those rights were clearly established at the time of the conduct at 12 issue.”).

14 A distinction between the burden of proof as to the constitutional violation and the burden
15 of proof as to objective reasonableness makes sense in the light of the structure of Section 1983
16 litigation. To prove her claim, the plaintiff must prove the existence of a constitutional violation;
17 qualified immunity becomes relevant only if the plaintiff carries that burden. Accordingly, the 18 plaintiff should bear the burden of proving the existence of a constitutional violation in connection
19 with the qualified immunity issue as well. However, it would accord with decisions such as Kopec
20 (and it would not contravene decisions such as Sherwood) to place the burden on the defendant to 21 prove that a reasonable officer would not have known, under the circumstances, that the conduct
22 was illegal.⁵

⁵ There is language in Estate of Smith v. Marasco, 430 F.3d 140 (3d Cir. 2005), which may be perceived as being in tension with Kopec’s statement that the defendant has the burden of proof on qualified immunity. In Marasco the Court of Appeals held the defendants were entitled to qualified immunity on the plaintiffs’ state-created danger claim because the court “conclude[d] that the Smiths cannot show that a reasonable officer would have recognized that his conduct was ‘conscience-shocking.’” Id. at 156. While this language can be read as contemplating that the plaintiffs have a burden of persuasion, it should be noted that the court was not focusing on a factual dispute but rather on the clarity of the caselaw at the time of the relevant events. See id. at 154 (stressing that the relevant question was “whether the law, as it existed in 1999, gave the troopers ‘fair warning’ that their actions were unconstitutional”) (quoting Hope v. Pelzer, 536 U.S. 730, 741 (2002)).

2 As noted in Comment 4.7.2, a jury question concerning qualified immunity will arise only 3 when there are material questions of historical fact. The court should submit the questions of 4 historical fact to the jury by means of special interrogatories; the court can then resolve the question
5 of qualified immunity by reference to the jury’s determination of the historical facts. Many 6 questions of historical fact may be relevant both to the existence of a constitutional violation and 7 to the question of objective reasonableness; as to those questions, the court should instruct the jury
8 that the plaintiff has the burden of proof. Other questions of historical fact, however, may be 9 relevant only to the question of objective reasonableness; as to those questions, if any, the court 10 should instruct the jury that the defendant has the burden of proof.

4.3 Section 1983 – Elements of ClaimModel

[Plaintiff] must prove both of the following elements by a preponderance of the evidence:

First: [Defendant] acted under color of state law.

Second: While acting under color of state law, [defendant] deprived [plaintiff] of a federal [constitutional right] [statutory right].

I will now give you more details on action under color of state law, after which I will tell you the elements [plaintiff] must prove to establish the violation of [his/her] federal [constitutional right] [statutory right].

Comment

“By the plain terms of § 1983, two – and only two – allegations are required in order to state a cause of action under that statute. First, the plaintiff must allege that some person has deprived him of a federal right. Second, he must allege that the person who has deprived him of that right acted under color of state or territorial law.” Gomez v. Toledo, 446 U.S. 635, 640 (1980); see also, e.g., Groman v. Township of Manalapan, 47 F.3d 628, 633 (3d Cir. 1995) (“A prima facie case under § 1983 requires a plaintiff to demonstrate: (1) a person deprived him of a federal right; and (2) the person who deprived him of that right acted under color of state or territorial law.”).

Some authorities include in the elements instruction a statement that the plaintiff must prove that the defendant’s acts or omissions were intentional. See, e.g., Ninth Circuit Civil Instruction 11.1. It is not clear, however, that the elements instruction is the best place to address the defendant’s state of mind. “Section 1983 itself ‘contains no state-of-mind requirement independent of that necessary to state a violation’ of the underlying federal right. . . . In any § 1983 suit, however, the plaintiff must establish the state of mind required to prove the underlying violation.” Board of County Com’rs of Bryan County, Okl. v. Brown, 520 U.S. 397, 405 (1997) (quoting Daniels v. Williams, 474 U.S. 327, 330 (1986)); see also Jordan v. Fox, Rothschild, O’Brien & Frankel, 20 F.3d 1250, 1277 (3d Cir. 1994) (noting that “section 1983 does not include any mens rea requirement in its text, but the Supreme Court has plainly read into it a state of mind requirement specific to the particular federal right underlying a § 1983 claim”). Because the mens rea requirement will depend on the nature of the constitutional violation, the better course is to address the requirement in the instructions on the specific violation(s) at issue in the case.

4.3 Section 1983 – Elements of Claim

1 Some authorities include, as a third element, a requirement that the defendant caused the 2 plaintiff's damages. See, e.g., Fifth Circuit Civil Instruction 10.1; Eleventh Circuit Civil 3 Instruction 2.2. It is true that the plaintiff cannot recover compensatory damages without showing
4 that the defendant's violation of the plaintiff's federal rights caused those damages. See Instruction
5 4.8.1, infra. It would be misleading, however, to consider this an element of the plaintiff's claim:
6 If the plaintiff proves that the defendant, acting under color of state law, violated the plaintiff's
7 federal right, then the plaintiff is entitled to an award of nominal damages even if the plaintiff
8 cannot prove actual damages. See infra Instruction 4.8.2.

10 If the Section 1983 claim asserts a conspiracy to deprive the plaintiff of civil rights,⁶ 11 additional instructions will be necessary. See, e.g., Ridgewood Bd. of Educ. v. N.E. ex rel. M.E., 12 172 F.3d 238, 254 (3d Cir. 1999) (“In order to prevail on a conspiracy claim under § 1983, a 13 plaintiff must prove that persons acting under color of state law conspired to deprive him of a 14 federally protected right.”); Marchese v. Umstead, 110 F.Supp.2d 361, 371 (E.D. Pa. 2000) (“To 15 state a section 1983 conspiracy claim, a plaintiff must allege: (1) the existence of a conspiracy
16 involving state action; and (2) a deprivation [sic] of civil rights in furtherance of the conspiracy
17 by a party to the conspiracy.”); see also Avery, Rudovsky & Blum,⁷ Instructions 12:31, 12:32, 18 12:33, & 12:43 (providing suggested instructions regarding a Section 1983 conspiracy claim).

1 4.4 Section 1983 – Action under Color of State Law

3 Model

5 The first element of [plaintiff’s] claim is that [defendant] acted under color of state law.
6 This means that [plaintiff] must show that [defendant] was using power that [he/she] possessed by 7 virtue of state law.

9 A person can act under color of state law even if the act violates state law. The question is 10 whether the person was clothed with the authority of the state, by which I mean using or misusing 11 the authority of the state.

13 By “state law,” I mean any statute, ordinance, regulation, custom or usage of any state.
14 And when I use the term “state,” I am including any political subdivisions of the state, such as a 15 county or municipality, and also any state, county or municipal agencies.

18 Comment

19 20 Whenever possible, the court should rule on the record whether the conduct of the 21 defendant constituted action under color of state law. In such cases, the court can use Instruction 22 4.4.1 to instruct the jury that this element of the plaintiff’s claim is not in dispute.

24 In cases involving material disputes of fact concerning action under color of state law, the 25 court should tailor the instructions on this element to the nature of the theory by which the plaintiff 26 is attempting to show action under color of state law. This comment provides an overview of some 27 theories that can establish such action; Instructions 4.4.2 and 4.4.3 provide models of instructions 28 for use with two such theories.

30 “[C]onduct satisfying the state-action requirement of the Fourteenth Amendment satisfies 31 [Section 1983’s] requirement of action under color of state law.” Lugar v. Edmondson Oil Co., 32 457 U.S. 922, 935 n.18 (1982).⁸ “Like the state-action requirement of the Fourteenth Amendment, 33 the under-color-of-state-law element of § 1983 excludes from its reach “‘merely private conduct,
34 no matter how discriminatory or wrongful.’”” American Mfrs. Mut. Ins. Co. v. Sullivan, 526 U.S.

⁸ See also Brentwood Acad. v. Tennessee Secondary Sch. Athletic Ass’n, 531 U.S. 288, 295 n.2 (2001) (“If a defendant's conduct satisfies the state-action requirement of the Fourteenth Amendment, the conduct also constitutes action ‘under color of state law’ for § 1983 purposes.”).

4.4 Section 1983 – Action under Color of State Law

1 40, 50 (1999) (quoting Blum v. Yaretsky, 457 U.S. 991, 1002 (1982) (quoting Shelley v. Kraemer, 2 334 U.S. 1, 13 (1948))). Liability under Section 1983 “attaches only to those wrongdoers ‘who 3 carry a badge of authority of a State and represent it in some capacity, whether they act in 4 accordance with their authority or misuse it.’” National Collegiate Athletic Ass'n v. Tarkanian, 5 488 U.S. 179, 191 (1988) (quoting Monroe v. Pape, 365 U.S. 167, 172 (1961)). “The traditional 6 definition of acting under color of state law requires that the defendant in a § 1983 action have 7 exercised power ‘possessed by virtue of state law and made possible only because the wrongdoer
8 is clothed with the authority of state law.’” West v. Atkins, 487 U.S. 42, 49 (1988) (quoting United 9 States v. Classic, 313 U.S. 299, 326 (1941)).⁹

11 The inquiry into the question of action under color of state law “is fact-specific.” Groman
12 v. Township of Manalapan, 47 F.3d 628, 638 (3d Cir. 1995). “In the typical case raising a 13 state-action issue, a private party has taken the decisive step that caused the harm to the plaintiff, 14 and the question is whether the State was sufficiently involved to treat that decisive conduct as 15 state action. . . . Thus, in the usual case we ask whether the State provided a mantle of authority 16 that enhanced the power of the harm-causing individual actor.” Tarkanian, 488 U.S. at 192.
17 Circumstances that can underpin a finding of state action include the following:

- 18
19 • A finding of “a sufficiently close nexus between the state and the challenged action of the 20 [private] entity so that the action of the latter may fairly be treated as that of the State 21 itself.”¹⁰
23 • A finding that “the State create[d] the legal framework governing the conduct.”¹¹
24
25 • A finding that the government “delegate[d] its authority to the private actor.”¹²

⁹ Compare Citizens for Health v. Leavitt, 428 F.3d 167, 182 (3d Cir. 2005) (holding that a federal regulation that “authoriz[ed] conduct that was already legally permissible” – and that did not preempt state laws regulating such conduct more strictly – did not meet the “state action requirement”).

¹⁰ McKeesport Hosp. v. Accreditation Council for Graduate Med. Educ., 24 F.3d 519, 524 (3d Cir. 1994) (quoting Jackson v. Metropolitan Edison Co., 419 U.S. 345, 351 (1974)).

4.4 Section 1983 – Action under Color of State Law

- 1 • A finding that the government “knowingly accept[ed] the benefits derived from 2 unconstitutional behavior.”¹³
- 4 • A finding that “the private party has acted with the help of or in concert with state
5 officials.”¹⁴ For an instruction on private action in concert with state officials, see 6 Instruction 4.4.3.

- 8 • A finding that the action ““result[ed] from the State's exercise of “coercive power.””¹⁵
- 10 • A finding that ““the State provide[d] “significant encouragement, either overt or 11 covert.””¹⁶
- 13 • A finding that ““a nominally private entity . . . is controlled by an “agency of the State.””¹⁷

¹⁴ McKeesport Hosp., 24 F.3d at 524. The Court of Appeals has explained that Supreme Court caselaw concerning “joint action or action in concert suggests that some sort of common purpose or intent must be shown.... [A] private citizen acting at the orders of a police officer is not generally acting in a willful manner, especially when that citizen has no self-interest in taking the action.... [W]illful participation ... means voluntary, uncoerced participation.” Harvey v. Plains Twp. Police Dept., 421 F.3d 185, 195-96 (3d Cir. 2005).

4.4 Section 1983 – Action under Color of State Law

- 1 • A finding that “a nominally private entity . . . is “entwined with governmental policies,” 2 or [that] government is “entwined in [its] management or control.””¹⁹

4 The fact that a defendant was pursuing a private goal does not preclude a finding that the 5 defendant acted under color of state law. See Georgia v. McCollum, 505 U.S. 42, 54 (1992)
6 (noting, in a case involving a question of “state action” for purposes of the Fourteenth Amendment, 7 that “[w]henver a private actor’s conduct is deemed ‘fairly attributable’ to the government, it is 8 likely that private motives will have animated the actor's decision”).

10 The “labyrinthine” and “murky” analysis of whether private action can be deemed that of 11 the state can be avoided if the “actor is the government,” Sprauve v. West Indian Company, 799
12 F.3d 226, 229 (3d Cir. 2015) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted), such as a public 13 corporation over which the state has “permanent and complete control” by government appointees.
14 Id. at 233 (footnote omitted).

Servis, 423 F.3d 337, 347 (3d Cir. 2005) (holding “that foster parents in Pennsylvania are not state actors for purposes of liability under § 1983”); Max v. Republican Committee of Lancaster County, 587 F.3d 198, 199, 203 (3d Cir. 2009) (holding that, under the circumstances, a political committee, its affiliate and certain of its officials were not acting as state actors when they allegedly sought to chill the speech of plaintiff – a committeewoman for the political committee – in connection with the Republican primary election).

¹⁹ Benn, 371 F.3d at 171 (quoting Brentwood, 531 U.S. at 296 (quoting Evans v. Newton, 382 U.S. 296, 299, 301 (1966))). See also P.R.B.A. Corp v. HMS Host Toll Roads, 808 F.3d 221 (3d Cir. 2015) (finding insufficiently pervasive entwinement between highway authorities and service area operators because there was no personnel overlap, no involvement in the particular decision at issue, and no indication that a profit sharing arrangement led to “any actual involvement of either entity in the management or control of the other,” even if the authorities required certain signs and photos be displayed).

6 [Defendant] is an official of [the state of ____] [the county of ____] [the city of ____].
7 However, [defendant] alleges that during the events at issue in this lawsuit, [defendant] was acting

10 For an act to be under color of state law, the person doing the act must have been doing it
11 while clothed with the authority of the state, by which I mean using or misusing the authority of 12 the state. You should consider the nature of the act, and the circumstances under which it occurred, 13 to determine whether it was under color of state law.

²⁰ Special problems may arise if the public employee in question has a professional obligation to someone other than the government. *Compare, e.g., West v. 4.4.3 Section 1983 – Whether a Private Person Conspired with a State Official

1 4.4.3 Section 1983 – Action under Color of State Law –
2 Determining Whether a Private Person Conspired with a State Official

6 [Defendant] is not a state official. However, [plaintiff] alleges that [defendant] acted under 7 color of state law by conspiring with one or more state officials to deprive [plaintiff] of a federal

10 A conspiracy is an agreement between two or more people to do something illegal. A 11 person who is not a state official acts under color of state law when [he/she] enters into a 12 conspiracy, involving one or more state officials, to do an act that deprives a person of federal 13 [constitutional] [statutory] rights.

15 To find a conspiracy in this case, you must find that [plaintiff] has proved both of the 16 following by a preponderance of the evidence:

18 First: [Defendant] agreed in some manner with [Official Roe and/or another participant in 19 the conspiracy with Roe] to do an act that deprived [plaintiff] of [describe federal 20 constitutional or statutory right].

22 Second: [Defendant] or a co-conspirator engaged in at least one act in furtherance of the 23 conspiracy.

25 As I mentioned, the first thing that [plaintiff] must show in order to prove a conspiracy is 26 that [defendant] and [Official Roe and/or another participant in the conspiracy with Roe] agreed 27 in some manner to do an act that deprived [plaintiff] of [describe federal constitutional or statutory 28 right].

30 Mere similarity of conduct among various persons, or the fact that they may have 31 associated with each other, or may have discussed some common aims or interests, is not 32 necessarily proof of a conspiracy. To prove a conspiracy, [plaintiff] must show that members of 33 the conspiracy came to a mutual understanding to do the act that violated [plaintiff's] [describe 34 right]. The agreement can be either express or implied. [Plaintiff] can prove the agreement by 35 presenting testimony from a witness who heard [defendant] and [Official Roe and/or another 36 participant in the conspiracy with Roe] discussing the agreement; but [plaintiff] can also prove the 37 agreement without such testimony, by presenting evidence of circumstances from which the 38 agreement can be inferred. In other words, if you infer from the sequence of events that it is more 39 likely than not that [defendant] and [Official Roe and/or another participant in the conspiracy with 40 Roe] agreed to do an act that deprived [plaintiff] of [describe right], then [plaintiff] has proved the

4.4.3 Section 1983 – Whether a Private Person Conspired with a State Official

1 existence of the agreement.

3 In order to find an agreement, you must find that there was a jointly accepted plan, and that 4 [defendant] and [state official] [each other conspirator] knew the plan’s essential nature and 5 general scope. A person who has no knowledge of a conspiracy, but who happens to act in a way
6 which furthers some purpose of the conspiracy, does not thereby become a conspirator. However,
7 you need not find that [defendant] knew the exact details of the plan [or the identity of all the 8 participants in it]. One may become a member of a conspiracy without full knowledge of all the 9 details of the conspiracy.

11 The second thing that [plaintiff] must show in order to prove a conspiracy is that 12 [defendant] or a co-conspirator engaged in at least one act in furtherance of the conspiracy. [In 13 this case, this requirement is satisfied if you find that [defendant] or a co-conspirator did any of 14 the following things: [Describe the acts alleged by the plaintiff].] [In other words, [plaintiff] must 15 prove that [defendant] or a co-conspirator took at least one action to further the goal of the
18

19 Comment 20

21 Alternative ways to show that a private person acted under color of state law. It should be 22 noted that demonstrating the existence of a conspiracy is not the only possible way to show that a
23 private individual acted under color of state law. See supra Comment 4.4. For example, when a 24 private person is acting, under a contract with the state, to perform a traditional public function, 25 the question may arise whether that person is acting under color of state law. Cf. Jackson v.
26 Metropolitan Edison Co., 419 U.S. 345, 352 (1974) (discussing “exercise by a private entity of 27 powers traditionally exclusively reserved to the State”); Richardson v. McKnight, 521 U.S. 399, 28 413 (1997) (in case involving “employees of a private prison management firm,” noting that the 29 Court was not deciding “whether the defendants are liable under § 1983 even though they are 30 employed by a private firm”).

32 Distinct issues concerning action under color of state law also could arise when a private 33 person hires a public official, the public official violates the plaintiff’s federal rights, and the 34 plaintiff sues the private person for actions that the private person did not agree upon with the state 35 official, but which the state official performed within the scope of his or her employment by the 36 private person.⁴⁶ There is some doubt whether a private entity can be held liable under Section

⁴⁶ If the private person hires the state official to do the act that constitutes the violation, and the state official agrees to be hired for that purpose, then this constitutes action under color

4.4.3 Section 1983 – Whether a Private Person Conspired with a State Official

1 1983 on a theory of respondeat superior.⁴⁷ However, even if respondeat superior liability is 2 unavailable, a private entity should be liable for its employee’s violation if a municipal employer
3 would incur Section 1983 liability under similar circumstances.⁴⁸ Some of the theories that could 4 establish the private employer’s liability – such as deliberate indifference – could establish the 5 private employer’s liability based on facts that would not suffice to demonstrate a conspiracy.

7 Absent evidence that the private party and the official conspired to commit the act that 8 violated the plaintiff’s rights, the “color of law” question will focus on whether the private party
9 acts under color of state law because she employs the state official.⁴⁹ Some indirect light may be 10 shed on this question by NCAA v. Tarkanian, 488 U.S. 179 (1988). The dispute in Tarkanian arose 11 because the NCAA penalized the University of Nevada, Las Vegas for asserted violations of 12 NCAA rules (including violations by Tarkanian, UNLV’s head basketball coach) and threatened 13 further penalties unless UNLV severed its connection with Tarkanian. See id. at 180-81. The 14 Court noted that Tarkanian presented the inverse of the “traditional state-action case,” id. at 192:
15 “[T]he final act challenged by Tarkanian – his suspension – was committed by UNLV” (a state 16 actor), and the dispute focused on whether the NCAA acted under color of state law in directing of state law under the conspiracy theory. See Abbott v. Latshaw, 164 F.3d 141, 147-48 (3d Cir. 1998).

⁴⁹ This discussion assumes that the state official acts under color of state law when he commits the violation.

4.4.3 Section 1983 – Whether a Private Person Conspired with a State Official

1 UNLV to suspend Tarkanian. The Court held that the NCAA did not act under color of state law:
2 “It would be more appropriate to conclude that UNLV has conducted its athletic program under 3 color of the policies adopted by the NCAA, rather than that those policies were developed and 4 enforced under color of Nevada law.” Id. at 199. In so holding, the Court rejected the plaintiff’s 5 contention that “the power of the NCAA is so great that the UNLV had no practical alternative to 6 compliance with its demands”: As the Court stated, “[w]e are not at all sure this is true, but even 7 if we assume that a private monopolist can impose its will on a state agency by a threatened refusal 8 to deal with it, it does not follow that such a private party is therefore acting under color of state 9 law.” Id. at 198-99.

11 It is possible to distinguish Tarkanian from the scenarios mentioned above. In one sense, 12 Tarkanian might have presented a more persuasive case of action under color of state law, since 13 the NCAA directed UNLV to do the very act that constituted the violation.⁵⁰ On the other hand, a 14 person’s employment of an off-duty state official might present a more persuasive case in other 15 respects, in the sense that an off-duty police officer might in fact be guided by the private 16 employer’s wishes to a greater extent than UNLV would willingly be guided by the NCAA’s
17 wishes. Thus, Tarkanian may not foreclose the possibility that a private party may act under color 18 of state law when employing a state official, even if the private party does not conspire with the 19 official concerning the act that constitutes a violation of the plaintiff’s rights.⁵¹

21 Comments on Instruction 4.4.3 regarding conspiracy. “[T]o act ‘under color of’ state law
22 for § 1983 purposes does not require that the defendant be an officer of the State. It is enough that 23 he is a willful participant in joint action with the State or its agents. Private persons, jointly engaged 24 with state officials in the challenged action, are acting see [sic] ‘under color’ of law for purposes
25 of § 1983 actions.” Dennis v. Sparks, 449 U.S. 24, 27-28 (1980) (citing Adickes v. S. H. Kress &

⁵⁰ The Tarkanian majority indicated that the NCAA’s directive to UNLV, and the fact that UNLV decided to follow that directive, did not establish that the NCAA and UNLV conspired (for purposes of showing that the NCAA acted under color of state law). See Tarkanian, 488 U.S. at 197 n.17.

⁵¹ In Cruz v. Donnelly, 727 F.2d 79 (3d Cir. 1984), “two police officers, acting at the request of [a private] company’s employee, stripped and searched the plaintiff for stolen goods,” id. at 79. Because the court in Cruz found no indication that the store employee exercised control over the officers, Cruz does not address the issue discussed in the text. 6 employment, and a Hattiesburg policeman somehow reached an understanding to deny Miss
7 Adickes service in The Kress store . . .”).⁵² The existence of a conspiracy can be proved through 8 circumstantial evidence. See, e.g., Adickes, 398 U.S. at 158 (“If a policeman were present, we 9 think it would be open to a jury, in light of the sequence that followed, to infer from the 10 circumstances that the policeman and a Kress employee had a ‘meeting of the minds’ and thus 11 reached an understanding that petitioner should be refused service.”).⁵³ 12

13 The Third Circuit has suggested that the plaintiff must establish the elements of a civil 14 conspiracy in order to use the existence of the conspiracy to demonstrate state action. See Melo v.
15 Hafer, 912 F.2d 628, 638 n.11 (3d Cir. 1990) (addressing plaintiff’s action-under-color-of-state-16 law argument and “assum[ing], without deciding, that the complaint alleges the prerequisites of a 17 civil conspiracy”), aff’d on other grounds, 502 U.S. 21 (1991). The Melo court cited a Seventh
18 Circuit opinion that provides additional detail on those elements. See Melo, 912 F.2d at 638 &

⁵² See also Cruz, 727 F.2d at 81 (“[A] store and its employees cannot be held liable under § 1983 unless: (1) the police have a pre-arranged plan with the store; and (2) under the plan, the police will arrest anyone identified as a shoplifter by the store without independently evaluating the presence of probable cause.”); Max v. Republican Committee of Lancaster County, 587 F.3d 198, 203 (3d Cir. 2009) (“Even if we accept the premise that poll-workers are state actors while guarding the integrity of an election, the defendants here ... are not the poll-watchers. Defendants here are private parties.... At most, defendants used the poll-workers to obtain information. This is not the same as conspiring to violate Max's First Amendment rights.”).

⁵³ In Startzell v. City of Philadelphia, 533 F.3d 183 (3d Cir. 2008), the Court of Appeals upheld the grant of summary judgment dismissing conspiracy claims under 42 U.S.C. §§ 1983 and 1985 because the plaintiffs failed to show the required “meeting of the minds.” See Startzell, 533 F.3d at 205 (“Philly Pride and the City ‘took diametrically opposed positions’ regarding how to deal with Appellants’ presence at OutFest.... The City rejected Philly Pride’s requests to exclude Appellants from attending OutFest; moreover, the police forced the Pink Angels to allow Appellants to enter OutFest under threat of arrest. It was also the vendors’ complaints, not requests by Philly Pride, that led the police officers to order Appellants to move toward OutFest’s perimeter.”). See also Great Western Mining & Mineral Co. v. Fox Rothschild LLP, 615 F.3d 159, 179 (3d Cir. 2010) (holding that plaintiff’s proposed amended complaint failed to plead “any facts that plausibly suggest a meeting of the minds” between the defendants and state-court judges who allegedly hoped for future employment with one of the defendants).

4.4.3 Section 1983 – Whether a Private Person Conspired with a State Official

1 n.11 (citing Hampton v. Hanrahan, 600 F.2d 600, 620-21 (7th Cir. 1979), rev'd in part on other
2 grounds, 446 U.S. 754 (1980)). Melo's citation to Hampton suggests that the plaintiff must show 3 both a conspiracy to violate the plaintiff's federal rights and an overt act in furtherance of the 4 conspiracy that results in such a violation. See Hampton, 600 F.2d at 620-21 (discussing agreement
5 and overt act requirements). Of course, in order to find liability under Section 1983, the jury must 6 in any event find a violation of the plaintiff's federal rights; and it will often be the case that the 7 relevant act in violation of the plaintiff's federal rights would necessarily have constituted an 8 action by a co-conspirator in furtherance of the conspiracy. This may explain why the Supreme 9 Court's references to the "conspiracy" test do not emphasize the overt-act-resulting-in-violation 10 requirement. See, e.g., Adickes, 398 U.S. at 152.

12 In appropriate cases, the existence of a conspiracy may also establish that a federal official
13 was acting under color of state law. See Hindes v. F.D.I.C., 137 F.3d 148, 158 (3d Cir. 1998)
14 ("[F]ederal officials are subject to section 1983 liability when sued in their official capacity where

10 [Plaintiff] contends that [supervisor’s] subordinate, [subordinate], violated [plaintiff’s]
11 federal rights, and that [supervisor] should be liable for [subordinate’s] conduct. If you find that 12 [subordinate] violated [plaintiff’s] federal rights, then you must consider whether [supervisor]
13 caused [subordinate’s] conduct.

15 [Supervisor] is not liable for such a violation simply because [supervisor] is [subordinate’s]
16 supervisor. To show that [supervisor] caused [subordinate’s] conduct, [plaintiff] must show one 17 of three things:

19 First: [Supervisor] directed [subordinate] to take the action in question; 20

21 Second: [Supervisor] had actual knowledge of [subordinate’s] violation of [plaintiff’s] 22 rights and [supervisor] acquiesced in that violation; or

24 Third: [Supervisor], with deliberate indifference to the consequences, established and 25 maintained a policy, practice or custom which directly caused the violation.

27 As I mentioned, the first way for [plaintiff] to show that [supervisor] is liable for 28 [subordinate’s] conduct is to show that [supervisor] directed [subordinate] to engage in the 29 conduct. [Plaintiff] need not show that [supervisor] directly, with [his/her] own hands, deprived
30 [plaintiff] of [his/her] rights. The law recognizes that a supervisor can act through others, setting 31 in motion a series of acts by subordinates that the supervisor knows, or reasonably should know, 32 would cause the subordinates to violate the plaintiff’s rights. Thus, [plaintiff] can show that 33 [supervisor] caused the conduct if [plaintiff] shows that [subordinate] violated [plaintiff’s] rights 34 at [supervisor’s] direction.

36 Alternatively, the second way for [plaintiff] to show that [supervisor] is liable for 37 [subordinate’s] conduct is to show that [supervisor] had actual knowledge of [subordinate’s]
38 violation of [plaintiff’s] rights and that [supervisor] acquiesced in that violation. To “acquiesce” 39 in a violation means to give assent to the violation. Acquiescence does not require a statement of 40 assent, out loud: acquiescence can occur through silent acceptance. If you find that [supervisor]

4.6.1 Section 1983 – Supervisory Officials

1 had authority over [subordinate] and that [supervisor] actually knew that [subordinate] was 2 violating [plaintiff’s] rights but failed to stop [subordinate] from doing so, you may infer that 3 [supervisor] acquiesced in [subordinate’s] conduct.

5 Finally, the third way for [plaintiff] to show that [supervisor] is liable for [subordinate’s]
6 conduct is to show that [supervisor], with deliberate indifference to the consequences, established
7 and maintained a policy, practice or custom which directly caused the conduct. [Plaintiff] alleges 8 that [supervisor] should have [adopted a practice of] [followed the existing policy of] [describe 9 supervisory practice or policy that plaintiff contends supervisor should have adopted or followed].

11 To prove that [supervisor] is liable for [subordinate’s] conduct based on [supervisor’s]
12 failure to [adopt that practice] [follow that policy], [plaintiff] must prove all of the following four 13 things by a preponderance of the evidence:

15 First: [The existing custom and practice without [describe supervisory practice]] [the 16 failure to follow the policy of [describe policy]] created an unreasonable risk of [describe 17 violation].

19 Second: [Supervisor] was aware that this unreasonable risk existed.
20

21 Third: [Supervisor] was deliberately indifferent to that risk.
22

23 Fourth: [Subordinate’s] [describe violation] resulted from [supervisor’s] failure to [adopt 24 [describe supervisory practice]] [follow [describe policy]].

27 Comment

28
29 Note concerning Instruction 4.6.1 and Ashcroft v. Iqbal: Instruction 4.6.1 was originally 30 drafted based on Third Circuit law prior to Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. 1937 (2009). Iqbal
31 involved the request by John Ashcroft and Robert Mueller for review of the denial of their motions 32 to dismiss the claims of Javaid Iqbal, who alleged that Ashcroft and Mueller “adopted an 33 unconstitutional policy that subjected [him] to harsh conditions of confinement on account of his 34 race, religion, or national origin” in the wake of September 11, 2001. Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1942.
35 In Iqbal, a closely-divided Court concluded that “vicarious liability is inapplicable to Bivens and 36 § 1983 suits” and that therefore “a plaintiff must plead that each Government-official defendant, 37 through the official’s own individual actions, has violated the Constitution.” Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 38 1948. It is not yet clear what Iqbal’s implications are for the theories of supervisors’ liability that

4.6.1 Section 1983 – Supervisory Officials

1 had previously been in use in the Third Circuit.⁵⁴

3 A theory of liability based on the supervisor’s direction to a subordinate to take the action
4 that violates the plaintiff’s rights would seem viable after Iqbal (subject to a caveat, noted below,
5 concerning levels of scienter); such a theory is reflected in the first of the three alternatives stated
6 in Instruction 4.6.1. The second and third alternatives stated in Instruction 4.6.1, by contrast, may 7 be more broadly affected by Iqbal. Versions of those alternative theories – a knowledge-and-
8 acquiescence theory⁵⁵ and a deliberate-indifference theory – were invoked by the plaintiff and the ⁵⁴ For cases indicating that some or all of the Third Circuit’s supervisory-liability standards survive Iqbal, see, e.g., McKenna v. City of Philadelphia, 582 F.3d 447, 460-61 (3d Cir. 2009) (upholding grant of judgment as a matter of law to defendants on supervisory liability claims and explaining that “[t]o be liable in this situation, a supervisor must have been involved personally, meaning through personal direction or actual knowledge and acquiescence, in the wrongs alleged”); Reedy v. Evanson, 615 F.3d 197, 231 (3d Cir. 2010) (applying the framework set by Baker v. Monroe Tp., 50 F.3d 1186 (3d Cir. 1995), and affirming dismissal of supervisory-liability claim based on lack of evidence “that Mannell directed Evanson to take or not to take any particular action concerning Reedy that would amount to a violation of her constitutional rights”); Marrakush Soc. v. New Jersey State Police, 2009 WL 2366132, at *31 (D.N.J. July 30, 2009) (“Personal involvement can be asserted through allegations of facts showing that a defendant directed, had actual knowledge of, or acquiesced in, the deprivation of a plaintiff’s constitutional rights.”).

For decisions that noted the question whether those standards survive Iqbal, see Santiago v. Warminster Twp., 629 F.3d 121, 130 n.8 (3d Cir. 2010) (“Numerous courts, including this one, have expressed uncertainty as to the viability and scope of supervisory liability after Iqbal.... Because we hold that Santiago’s pleadings fail even under our existing supervisory liability test, we need not decide whether Iqbal requires us to narrow the scope of that test.”); Argueta v. U.S. Immigration & Customs Enforcement, 643 F.3d 60, 70 (3d Cir. 2011) (“To date, we have refrained from answering the question of whether Iqbal eliminated – or at least narrowed the scope of – supervisory liability because it was ultimately unnecessary to do so in order to dispose of the appeal then before us.... We likewise make the same choice here....”).

⁵⁵ Cf. Bayer v. Monroe County Children and Youth Services, 577 F.3d 186, 190 n.5 (3d Cir. 2009) (“The [district] court concluded that plaintiffs had created a triable issue ‘as to whether Defendant Bahl had personal knowledge regarding the Fourteenth Amendment procedural due process violation.’ In light of the Supreme Court’s recent decision in [Iqbal], it is uncertain whether proof of such personal knowledge, with nothing more, would provide a sufficient basis for holding Bahl liable with respect to plaintiffs’ Fourteenth Amendment claims

1 dissenters in Iqbal; accordingly, the Iqbal majority’s conclusion that the plaintiff had failed to state
2 a claim, coupled with the majority’s statements concerning the non-existence of vicarious liability, 3 might be read to cast some question on the viability of those two alternatives.

5 However, the scope of Iqbal’s holding is subject to dispute. Though dictum in Iqbal
6 addresses Section 1983 claims, the holding concerns Bivens claims. Though Iqbal purports to 7 outlaw “vicarious liability” in both types of cases, it cites Monell with approval and indicates no
8 intent to displace existing doctrines of municipal liability (which are, in their conceptual structure, 9 quite similar to the theories of supervisor liability discussed in Instruction 4.6.1 and this 10 Comment).⁵⁶ And Iqbal itself concerned a type of constitutional violation – discrimination on the 11 basis of race, religion and/or national origin – that requires a showing of “discriminatory purpose”;
12 it is possible to read Iqbal as turning upon the notion that, to be liable for a subordinate’s 13 constitutional violation, the supervisor must have the same level of scienter as is required to 14 establish the underlying constitutional violation.⁵⁷ On that reading, a claim that requires a lesser 15 showing of scienter for the underlying violation – for example, a Fourth Amendment excessive 16 force claim – might have different implications (for purposes of the supervisor’s liability) than a 17 claim that requires a showing of purposeful discrimination for the underlying violation.

19 The court of appeals has begun to settle some of these issues. In Barkes v. First
20 Correctional Medical, 766 F.3d 307 (3d Cir. 2014), rev’d on other grounds, 135 S. Ct. 2042
21 (2015), it applied Iqbal to a section 1983 action. In addition, it held, as suggested above, that,
22 “under Iqbal, the level of intent necessary to establish supervisory liability will vary with the 23 underlying constitutional tort alleged.” Id. at 319. The underlying constitutional tort in Barkes was 24 “the denial of adequate medical care in violation of the Eighth Amendment’s prohibition on cruel 25 and unusual punishment, and the accompanying mental state is subjective deliberate indifference.”
26 Id. It therefore held that the standard previously announced in Sample v. Diecks, 885 F.2d 1099,
27 1117-18 (3d Cir. 1989), for imposing supervisory liability based on an Eighth Amendment 28 violation is consistent with Iqbal. It left for another day the question whether and under what under § 1983.... We need not resolve this matter here, however.”).

⁵⁶ Cf., e.g., Horton v. City of Harrisburg, 2009 WL 2225386, at *5 (M.D.Pa. July 23, 2009) (“Supervisory liability under § 1983 utilizes the same standard as municipal liability. See Iqbal Therefore, a supervisor will only be liable for the acts of a subordinate if he fosters a policy or custom that amounts to deliberate indifference towards an individual’s constitutional rights.”).

⁵⁷ In cases where the underlying constitutional violation requires a showing of purposeful discrimination, Iqbal thus appears to heighten the standard for supervisors’ liability even under the first of the three theories described in Instruction 4.6.1.

4.6.1 Section 1983 – Supervisory Officials

1 circumstances a claim for supervisory liability derived from a violation of a different constitutional
2 provision remains valid. See also Chavarriaga v. New Jersey Dept. of Corr., 806 F.3d 210 (3d Cir.
3 2015) (applying Sample to Eighth Amendment claims and stating that “liability under 1983 may 4 be imposed on an official with final policymaking authority if that official establishes an 5 unconstitutional policy that, when implemented, injures a plaintiff”).

7 In Parkell v. Danberg, 833 F.3d 313, 331 (3d Cir. 2016), the court of appeals held that a
8 supervisor who “passively permits his subordinates to implement a policy that was set by someone 9 else and is beyond the official’s authority to change” is not subject to supervisory liability. A prison 10 warden who knew about a search practice was not subject to supervisory liability because the 11 plaintiff failed to point to “any evidence of where the search policy, practice, or custom came 12 from,” and it might have been established by the Department of Corrections, leaving the warden
13 with no authority to change it. Id. at 331. Parkell also held that the standard for supervisory liability 14 does not apply to injunctions, so that the defendants’ lack of “personal involvement in past 15 constitutional violations does not preclude . . . prospective injunctive relief” against a defendant.
16 Id. at 332. See also Mack v. Warden Loretto FCI, 839 F.3d 286 (3d Cir. 2016) (affirming the 17 dismissal of a claim against a warden and deputy warden because the “complaint makes clear that 18 [the plaintiff] only spoke to these defendants after the alleged retaliation occurred,” and provides 19 no basis for inferring that they “were personally involved in any purported retaliation”).
20

21 Pending further guidance from the Supreme Court or the court of appeals, the Committee 22 decided to alert readers to these issues without attempting to anticipate the further development of 23 the law in this area. In determining whether to employ some or all portions of Instruction 4.6.1, 24 courts should give due attention to the implications of Iqbal for the particular type of claim at 25 issue. See also Wood v. Moss, 134 S. Ct. 2056 (2014) (relying on Iqbal in a case alleging viewpoint 26 discrimination and declining to infer from alleged misconduct by some Secret Service agents an 27 unwritten Secret Service policy to “suppress disfavored expression, and then to attribute that 28 supposed policy to all field-level operatives”).

30 The remainder of this Comment discusses Third Circuit law as it stood prior to Iqbal.

31 Discussion of pre-Iqbal caselaw

34 A supervisor incurs Section 1983 liability in connection with the actions of another only if 35 he or she had “personal involvement in the alleged wrongs.” Rode v. Dellarciprete, 845 F.2d 1195, 36 1207 (3d Cir. 1988). In the Third Circuit,⁵⁸ “[p]ersonal involvement can be shown through 37 allegations of personal direction or of actual knowledge and acquiescence.” Id.; see also C.N. v.

⁵⁸ See Baker v. Monroe Tp., 50 F.3d 1186, 1194 n.5 (3d Cir. 1995) (noting that “other circuits have developed broader standards for supervisory liability under section 1983”).

4.6.1 Section 1983 – Supervisory Officials

1 Ridgewood Bd. of Educ., 430 F.3d 159, 173 (3d Cir. 2005) (“To impose liability on the individual
2 defendants, Plaintiffs must show that each one individually participated in the alleged 3 constitutional violation or approved of it.”); Baker v. Monroe Tp., 50 F.3d 1186, 1194 (3d Cir.
4 1995) (noting that “actual knowledge can be inferred from circumstances other than actual sight”);
5 A.M. ex rel. J.M.K. v. Luzerne County Juvenile Detention Center, 372 F.3d 572, 586 (3d Cir. 2004)
6 (noting that “a supervisor may be personally liable under § 1983 if he or she participated in 7 violating the plaintiff’s rights, directed others to violate them, or, as the person in charge, had 8 knowledge of and acquiesced in his subordinates’ violations”); Black v. Stephens, 662 F.2d 181, 9 189 (3d Cir. 1981) (“To hold a police chief liable under section 1983 for the unconstitutional
10 actions of one of his officers, a plaintiff is required to establish a causal connection between the 11 police chief’s actions and the officer’s unconstitutional activity.”). The model instruction is 12 designed for cases in which the plaintiff does not assert that the supervisor directly participated in 13 the activity; if the plaintiff provides evidence of direct participation, the instruction can be altered
14 to reflect that direct participation by the supervisor is also a basis for liability.

16 A number of circumstances may bear upon the determination concerning actual 17 knowledge. See, e.g., Atkinson v. Taylor, 316 F.3d 257, 271 (3d Cir. 2003) (holding, with respect 18 to commissioner of state department of corrections, that “[t]he scope of his responsibilities are 19 much more narrow than that of a governor or state attorney general, and logically demand more 20 particularized scrutiny of individual complaints”).

22 As to acquiescence, “[w]here a supervisor with authority over a subordinate knows that the 23 subordinate is violating someone’s rights but fails to act to stop the subordinate from doing so, the 24 factfinder may usually infer that the supervisor ‘acquiesced’ in (i.e., tacitly assented to or accepted)
25 the subordinate’s conduct.” Robinson v. City of Pittsburgh, 120 F.3d 1286, 1294 (3d Cir. 1997).

27 A supervisor with policymaking authority may also, in an appropriate case, be liable based 28 on the failure to adopt a policy.⁵⁹ See A.M. ex rel. J.M.K., 372 F.3d at 586 (“Individual defendants 29 who are policymakers may be liable under § 1983 if it is shown that such defendants, ‘with 30 deliberate indifference to the consequences, established and maintained a policy, practice or 31 custom which directly caused [the] constitutional harm.”) (quoting Stoneking v. Bradford Area 32 Sch. Dist., 882 F.2d 720, 725 (3d Cir.1989)). The analysis of such a claim appears to track the 33 deliberate indifference analysis employed in the context of municipal liability. See id. (holding ⁵⁹ When a supervisor with policymaking authority is sued on a failure-to-train theory, the standard appears to be the same as for municipal liability. See Gilles v. Davis, 427 F.3d 197, 207 n.7 (3d Cir. 2005) (“A supervising authority may be liable under § 1983 for failing to train police officers when the failure to train demonstrates deliberate indifference to the constitutional rights of those with whom the officers may come into contact.”); see also infra Comment 4.6.7 (discussing municipal liability for failure to train).

1 that summary judgment for the supervisors in their individual capacities was inappropriate,
2 “[g]iven our conclusion that A.M. presented sufficient evidence to present a jury question on” the 3 issue of municipal liability for failure to adopt adequate policies); Sample v. Diecks, 885 F.2d
4 1099, 1117-18 (3d Cir. 1989) (“Although the issue here is one of individual liability rather than of 5 the liability of a political subdivision, we are confident that, absent official immunity, the standard 6 of individual liability for supervisory public officials will be found to be no less stringent than the 7 standard of liability for the public entities that they serve.”); see also id. at 1118 (holding that “a
8 judgment could not properly be entered against Robinson in this case based on supervisory liability
9 absent an identification by Sample of a specific supervisory practice or procedure that Robinson
10 failed to employ and specific findings by the district court that (1) the existing custom and practice
11 without that specific practice or procedure created an unreasonable risk of prison overstay, (2)
12 Robinson was aware that this unreasonable risk existed, (3) Robinson was indifferent to that risk,
13 and (4) Diecks' failure to assure that Sample's complaint received meaningful consideration 14 resulted from Robinson's failure to employ that supervisory practice or procedure”).

4.6.3 Section 1983 – Municipalities – General Instruction

1 “[M]unicipalities and other local government units [are] included among those persons to 2 whom § 1983 applies.” Monell v. Department of Social Services of City of New York, 436 U.S.
3 658, 690 (1978) (overruling in relevant part Monroe v. Pape, 365 U.S. 167 (1961)). However, “a
4 municipality cannot be held liable under § 1983 on a respondeat superior theory.” Id. at 691.⁶⁰
5 “Instead, it is when execution of a government's policy or custom, whether made by its lawmakers
6 or by those whose edicts or acts may fairly be said to represent official policy, inflicts the injury
7 that the government as an entity is responsible under § 1983.” Id. at 694.⁶¹ The Court has 8 elaborated several ways in which a municipality can cause a violation and thus incur liability. See 9 Instructions 4.6.4 - 4.6.8 and accompanying Comments for further details on each theory of 10 liability.

12 Ordinarily, proof of municipal liability in connection with the actions of ground-level
13 officers will require, inter alia, proof of a constitutional violation by one or more of those officers.⁶²
14 See, e.g., Grazier ex rel. White v. City of Philadelphia, 328 F.3d 120, 124 (3d Cir. 2003) (“There 15 cannot be an ‘award of damages against a municipal corporation based on the actions of one of its 16 officers when in fact the jury has concluded that the officer inflicted no constitutional harm.’”)
17 (quoting City of Los Angeles v. Heller, 475 U.S. 796, 799 (1986) (per curiam)). In Fagan v. City 18 of Vineland, however, the court held that “a municipality can be liable under section 1983 and the 19 Fourteenth Amendment for a failure to train its police officers with respect to high-speed 20 automobile chases, even if no individual officer participating in the chase violated the 21 Constitution.” Fagan v. City of Vineland, 22 F.3d 1283, 1294 (3d Cir. 1994). A later Third Circuit 22 panel suggested that the court erred in Fagan when it dispensed with the requirement of an
23 underlying constitutional violation. See Mark v. Borough of Hatboro, 51 F.3d 1137, 1153 n.13

⁶² See, e.g., Vargas v. City of Philadelphia, 783 F.3d 962, 975 (3d Cir. 2015) (“Because the officers did not violate any of her constitutional rights . . . there was no violation for which the City of Philadelphia could be held responsible.”); Mulholland v. Government County of Berks, 706 F.3d 227, 238 n.15 (3d Cir. 2013) (“It is well-settled that, if there is no violation in the first place, there can be no derivative municipal claim.”); id. at 244 n.24 (“Given our disposition of the underlying substantive due process claim . . . we need not address the Monell analysis . . .”); Startzell v. City of Philadelphia, 533 F.3d 183, 204 (3d Cir. 2008) (“Because we have found that there was no violation of Appellants' constitutional rights, we need not reach the claim against the City under Monell.”).

4.6.3 Section 1983 – Municipalities – General Instruction

1 (3d Cir. 1995) (“It appears that, by focusing almost exclusively on the ‘deliberate indifference’
2 prong . . . , the panel opinion did not apply the first prong – establishing an underlying 3 constitutional violation.”). It appears that the divergence between Fagan and Mark reflects a 4 distinction between cases in which the municipality’s liability is derivative of the violation(s) by 5 the ground-level officer(s) and cases in which the plaintiff seeks to show that the municipality’s 6 conduct itself is unconstitutional: As the court explained in Grazier, “We were concerned in 7 Fagan that, where the standard for liability is whether state action ‘shocks the conscience,’ a city
8 could escape liability for deliberately malicious conduct by carrying out its misdeeds through 9 officers who do not recognize that their orders are unconstitutional and whose actions therefore do
10 not shock the conscience.” Grazier, 328 F.3d at 124 n.5 (stating that the holding in Fagan was 11 “carefully confined . . . to its facts: a substantive due process claim resulting from a police pursuit,” 12 and holding that Fagan did not apply to “a Fourth Amendment excessive force claim”). See also 13 Thomas v. Cumberland County, 749 F.3d 217 (3d Cir. 2014) (reversing a grant of summary 14 judgment for county, even though the two individual officer defendants prevailed, without 15 discussing whether the county’s liability requires proof of a constitutional violation by an 16 individual officer).

18 In addition to showing the existence of an official policy or custom, plaintiff must prove 19 “that the municipal practice was the proximate cause of the injuries suffered.” Bielevicz v.
20 Dubinon, 915 F.2d 845, 850 (3d Cir. 1990). “To establish the necessary causation, a plaintiff must 21 demonstrate a ‘plausible nexus’ or ‘affirmative link’ between the municipality’s custom and the 22 specific deprivation of constitutional rights at issue.” Id. (quoting City of Oklahoma City v. Tuttle, 23 471 U.S. 808, 823 (1985); and Estate of Bailey by Oare v. County of York, 768 F.2d 503, 507 (3d 24 Cir.1985), overruled on other grounds by DeShaney v. Winnebago County Department of Social 25 Services, 489 U.S. 189 (1989)); see also Bielevicz, 915 F.2d at 851 (holding that “plaintiffs must 26 simply establish a municipal custom coupled with causation – i.e., that policymakers were aware 27 of similar unlawful conduct in the past, but failed to take precautions against future violations, and 28 that this failure, at least in part, led to their injury”); Carswell v. Borough of Homestead, 381 F.3d 29 235, 244 (3d Cir. 2004) (“There must be ‘a direct causal link between a municipal policy or custom
30 and the alleged constitutional deprivation.”) (quoting Brown v. Muhlenberg Township, 269 F.3d 31 205, 214 (3d Cir. 2001) (quoting Canton, 489 U.S. at 385)). “As long as the causal link is not too 32 tenuous, the question whether the municipal policy or custom proximately caused the 33 constitutional infringement should be left to the jury.” Bielevicz, 915 F.2d at 851. “A sufficiently 34 close causal link between . . . a known but uncorrected custom or usage and a specific violation is 35 established if occurrence of the specific violation was made reasonably probable by permitted
36 continuation of the custom.” Id. (quoting Spell v. McDaniel, 824 F.2d 1380, 1391 (4th Cir. 1987)); 37 see also A.M. ex rel. J.M.K. v. Luzerne County Juvenile Detention Center, 372 F.3d 572, 582 (3d 38 Cir. 2004) (“The deficiency of a municipality’s training program must be closely related to the 39 plaintiff’s ultimate injuries.”).

41 In the case of claims (such as failure-to-train claims) that require proof of deliberate

4.6.3 Section 1983 – Municipalities – General Instruction

1 indifference, evidence that shows deliberate indifference will often help to show causation as well.
2 Reflecting on failure-to-train cases, the Court has observed:

4 The likelihood that the situation will recur and the predictability that an officer
5 lacking specific tools to handle that situation will violate citizens' rights could 6 justify a finding that policymakers' decision not to train the officer reflected 7 "deliberate indifference" to the obvious consequence of the policymakers' choice –
8 namely, a violation of a specific constitutional or statutory right. The high degree 9 of predictability may also support an inference of causation – that the municipality's 10 indifference led directly to the very consequence that was so predictable.

13

14 It is clear that a municipality’s legislative action constitutes government policy. “No one 15 has ever doubted . . . that a municipality may be liable under § 1983 for a single decision by its 16 properly constituted legislative body – whether or not that body had taken similar action in the 17 past or intended to do so in the future – because even a single decision by such a body
18 unquestionably constitutes an act of official government policy.” Pembaur v. City of Cincinnati, 19 475 U.S. 469, 480 (1986). Likewise, if the legislative body delegates authority to a municipal 20 agency or board, an action by that agency or board also constitutes government policy. See, e.g.,
21 Monell v. Department of Social Services of City of New York, 436 U.S. 658, 660-61 & n.2 (1978)
22 (describing actions by Department of Social Services and Board of Education of the City of New 23 York); id. at 694 (holding that “this case unquestionably involves official policy”).

25 On the other hand, where an ordinance is facially valid, the mere existence of the ordinance
26 itself will not provide a basis for municipal liability for a claim concerning discriminatory 27 enforcement. See Brown v. City of Pittsburgh, 586 F.3d 263, 292-94 (3d Cir. 2009).

7 The [governing body] of the [municipality] is a policymaking entity whose actions
8 represent a decision by the government itself. The same is true of an official or body to whom the 9 [governing body] has given final policymaking authority: The actions of that official or body 10 represent a decision by the government itself.

12 Thus, when [governing body] or [policymaking official] make a deliberate choice to follow
13 a course of action, that choice represents an official policy. Through such a policy, the [governing 14 body] or the [policymaking official] may cause a violation of a federal right by:

- 16 • directing that the violation occur,
- 17 • authorizing the violation, or
- 18 • agreeing to a subordinate’s decision to engage in the violation.

35 A deliberate choice by an individual government official constitutes government policy if 36 the official has been granted final decision-making authority concerning the relevant area or issue.
37 See Beck v. City of Pittsburgh, 89 F.3d 966, 971 (3d Cir. 1996); see also LaVerdure v. County of 38 Montgomery, 324 F.3d 123, 125 (3d Cir. 2003) (“Even though Marino himself lacked final

1 Board delegated him the authority to speak for the Board or acquiesced in his statements.”). In 2 this context, “municipal liability under § 1983 attaches where – and only where – a deliberate
3 choice to follow a course of action is made from among various alternatives by the official or 4 officials responsible for establishing final policy with respect to the subject matter in question.”
5 Pembaur v. City of Cincinnati, 475 U.S. 469, 483 (1986) (plurality opinion); see also Kneipp v.
6 Tedder, 95 F.3d 1199, 1213 (3d Cir. 1996) (“In order to ascertain who is a policymaker, ‘a court
7 must determine which official has final, unreviewable discretion to make a decision or take 8 action.’”) (quoting Andrews v. City of Philadelphia, 895 F.2d 1469, 1481 (3d Cir. 1990)).

12 question for us by, for example, simply labeling as a state official an official who clearly makes 13 county policy. But our understanding of the actual function of a governmental official, in a 14 particular area, will necessarily be dependent on the definition of the official’s functions under 15 relevant state law.”).⁶³ “As with other questions of state law relevant to the application of federal 16 law, the identification of those officials whose decisions represent the official policy of the local 17 governmental unit is itself a legal question to be resolved by the trial judge before the case is 18 submitted to the jury.” Jett v. Dallas Independent School Dist., 491 U.S. 701, 737 (1989).

20 [T]he trial judge must identify those officials or governmental bodies who speak 21 with final policymaking authority for the local governmental actor concerning the 22 action alleged to have caused the particular constitutional or statutory violation at 23 issue. Once those officials who have the power to make official policy on a 24 particular issue have been identified, it is for the jury to determine whether their 25 decisions have caused the deprivation of rights at issue by policies which 26 affirmatively command that it occur . . . , or by acquiescence in a longstanding 27 practice or custom which constitutes the “standard operating procedure” of the local 28 governmental entity.

30 Id. Not only must the official have final policymaking authority, the official must be considered 31 to be acting as a municipal official rather than a state official in order for municipal liability to 32 attach. See McMillian, 520 U.S. at 793 (holding that “Alabama sheriffs, when executing their law 33 enforcement duties, represent the State of Alabama, not their counties”).

35 Instruction 4.6.5 notes that a policymaker may cause a violation of a federal right by 36 directing that the violation occur, authorizing the violation, or agreeing to a subordinate’s decision

⁶³ See McGreevy v. Stroup, 413 F.3d 359, 369 (3d Cir. 2005) (analyzing Pennsylvania law and concluding that “[b]ecause the school superintendent is a final policymaker with regard to ratings, his ratings and/or those of the school principal constitute official government policy”).

4.6.5 Section 1983 – Choice by Policymaking Official

1 to engage in the violation. With respect to the third option – agreement to a subordinate’s decision
2 – the relevant agreement can sometimes occur after the fact. Thus, for example, the plurality in 3 Praprotnik observed that “when a subordinate’s decision is subject to review by the municipality’s 4 authorized policymakers, they have retained the authority to measure the official’s conduct for 5 conformance with their policies. If the authorized policymakers approve a subordinate’s decision
6 and the basis for it, their ratification would be chargeable to the municipality because their decision
7 is final.” City of St. Louis v. Praprotnik, 485 U.S. 112, 127 (1988) (plurality opinion); see
8 also Brennan v. Norton, 350 F.3d 399, 427-28 (3d Cir. 2003) (citing Praprotnik); LaVerdure v.

13 holding the municipality liable is if Tucker knowingly acquiesced to the decisions made at AID.”).
14 In an appropriate case, Instruction 4.6.5 may be modified to refer to a policymaker’s “agreeing 15 after the fact to a subordinate’s decision to engage in the violation.”

22

23 Even in the absence of an official policy, a municipality may incur liability if an official 24 custom causes a constitutional tort. See Beck v. City of Pittsburgh, 89 F.3d 966, 971 (3d Cir.
25 1996).⁶⁶ “Custom . . . can be proven by showing that a given course of conduct, although not

2 constitute law.” Bielevicz v. Dubinon, 915 F.2d 845, 850 (3d Cir. 1990); see also Board of County
3 Com'rs of Bryan County, Okl. v. Brown, 520 U.S. 397, 404 (1997) (“[A]n act performed pursuant 4 to a ‘custom’ that has not been formally approved by an appropriate decisionmaker may fairly 5 subject a municipality to liability on the theory that the relevant practice is so widespread as to 6 have the force of law.”).

8 As these statements suggest, evidence of a single incident without more will not suffice to 9 establish the existence of a custom: “A single incident by a lower level employee acting under 10 color of law . . . does not suffice to establish either an official policy or a custom. However, if 11 custom can be established by other means, a single application of the custom suffices to establish 12 that it was done pursuant to official policy and thus to establish the agency's liability.” Fletcher v.
13 O'Donnell, 867 F.2d 791, 793 (3d Cir. 1989) (citing Oklahoma City v. Tuttle, 471 U.S. 808 (1985)
14 (plurality opinion)). For example, plaintiff can present evidence of a pattern of similar incidents 15 and inadequate responses to those incidents in order to demonstrate custom through municipal 16 acquiescence. See Beck, 89 F.3d at 972 (“These complaints include the Debold incident, which,
17 although it occurred after Beck's experience, may have evidentiary value for a jury's consideration 18 whether the City and policymakers had a pattern of tacitly approving the use of excessive force.”).

20 The weight of Third Circuit caselaw indicates that the plaintiff must make some showing 21 that a policymaking official knew of the custom and acquiesced in it.⁶⁷ Language in Jett v. Dallas
22 Independent School District, 491 U.S. 701 (1989), could be read to contemplate such a 23 requirement, though the Jett Court did not have occasion to consider that issue in detail.⁶⁸ In a long-standing condition that had become an acceptable standard and practice for the City.”).

⁶⁷ In B.S. v. Somerset County, 704 F.3d 250 (3d Cir. 2013), the Court of Appeals held that the County was liable for violating the plaintiff's procedural Due Process rights because the County had a “custom of removing children from a parent's home [based on alleged abuse] without conducting a prompt post-removal hearing if another parent can take custody,” id. at 275. The court of appeals held that there was no need to resolve “who the relevant policymaker was” because of the County's “effective admission of a custom.” Id. at 275 n.36.

⁶⁸ In Jett, the Court remanded for a determination of whether the school district superintendent was a policymaking official for purposes of the plaintiff's claims under 42 U.S.C. § 1981. The Court instructed that on remand Section 1983's municipal-liability standards would govern. See id. at 735-36. “Once those officials who have the power to make official policy on a particular issue have been identified, it is for the jury to determine whether their decisions have caused the deprivation of rights at issue by policies which affirmatively command that it

4.6.6 Section 1983 – Municipalities – Custom

1 number of subsequent cases, the Court of Appeals has read Jett to require knowledge and 2 acquiescence. In Andrews v. City of Philadelphia, 895 F.2d 1469 (3d Cir. 1990), the Court of 3 Appeals affirmed the grant of j.n.o.v. in favor of the City on the plaintiffs’ Section 1983 claims of 4 sexual harassment by their coworkers and supervisors. The court stressed that to establish 5 municipal liability “it is incumbent upon a plaintiff to show that a policymaker is responsible either
6 for the policy or, through acquiescence, for the custom.” Id. at 1480. Thus, “given the jury verdict
7 in favor of [Police Commissioner] Tucker, the lowest level policymaker implicated,” j.n.o.v. for 8 the City was warranted. Id. at 1480; see also Jiminez v. All American Rathskeller, Inc., 503 F.3d
9 247, 250 (3d Cir. 2007) (citing Andrews with approval). In Simmons v. City of Philadelphia, 947 occur . . . , or by acquiescence in a longstanding practice or custom which constitutes the

Cincinnati, 475 U.S. 469, 485-87 (1986) (White, J., concurring in part and in the judgment)).
Though this language suggests an expectation that a custom analysis would depend on a policymaker’s knowledge and acquiescence, such a requirement was not the focus of the Court’s opinion in Jett. Moreover, the Jett Court’s quotation from Justice White’s partial concurrence in Pembaur is somewhat puzzling. In Pembaur the Court held “that municipal liability may be imposed for a single decision by municipal policymakers under appropriate circumstances.”
Pembaur, 475 U.S. at 480. Because Pembaur focused on instances where a policymaker directed the challenged activity, municipal liability under the “custom” theory was not at issue in the case. See id. at 481 n.10 (plurality opinion). Justice White’s Pembaur concurrence does not suggest otherwise; the language quoted by the Jett Court constitutes Justice White’s explanation of his reasons for agreeing that the policymakers’ directives in Pembaur could ground municipal liability. Justice White explained:

The city of Cincinnati frankly conceded that forcible entry of third-party property to effect otherwise valid arrests was standard operating procedure. There is no reason to believe that respondent county would abjure using lawful means to execute the capias issued in this case or had limited the authority of its officers to use force in executing capias. Further, the county officials who had the authority to approve or disapprove such entries opted for the forceful entry, a choice that was later held to be inconsistent with the Fourth Amendment.
Vesting discretion in its officers to use force and its use in this case sufficiently manifested county policy to warrant reversal of the judgment below.

Pembaur, 475 U.S. at 485 (White, J., concurring in part and in the judgment). Thus, the Jett
Court’s quote from Justice White’s Pembaur opinion further supports the inference that the Jett Court did not give sustained attention to the contours of the custom branch of the municipal-liability doctrine.

4.6.6 Section 1983 – Municipalities – Custom

1 F.2d 1042 (3d Cir. 1991), a fractured court affirmed a judgment in favor of the mother of a man
2 who committed suicide while detained in a city jail. See id. at 1048. Judge Becker, announcing 3 the judgment of the court, viewed Jett as holding “that even when a plaintiff alleges that a 4 municipal custom or practice, as opposed to a municipal policy, worked a constitutional 5 deprivation, the plaintiff must both identify officials with ultimate policymaking authority in the 6 area in question and adduce scienter-like evidence – in this case of acquiescence – with respect to 7 them.” Simmons, 947 F.2d at 1062 (opinion of Becker, J.). Chief Judge Sloviter wrote separately 8 to stress that officials’ reckless disregard of conditions of which they should have known should 9 suffice to meet the standard, see id. at 1089-91 (Sloviter, C.J., concurring in part and in the 10 judgment), but she did not appear to question the view that some sort of knowledge and 11 acquiescence was required. Citing Andrews and Simmons, the court in Baker v. Monroe Township, 12 50 F.3d 1186 (3d Cir. 1995), held that the plaintiffs “must show that a policymaker for the 13 Township authorized policies that led to the violations or permitted practices that were so 14 permanent and well settled as to establish acquiescence,” id. at 1191.⁶⁹ See also Kneipp v. Tedder, 15 95 F.3d 1199, 1212 (3d Cir. 1996) (“[A] prerequisite to establishing [municipal] liability ... is a 16 showing that a policymaker was responsible either for the policy or, through acquiescence, for the

19 Though it thus appears that a showing of knowledge and acquiescence is required, a 20 number of cases suggest that actual knowledge need not be proven.⁷⁰ Rather, some showing of 21 constructive knowledge may suffice; this view is reflected in the first bracketed sentence in 22 Instruction 4.6.6. For example, the court seemed to approve a constructive-knowledge standard in

⁷⁰ In Andrews, the court suggested that Police Commissioner Tucker’s lack of actual knowledge was significant to the court’s holding that the municipal-liability claim failed: “[A]lthough Tucker reviewed the decision made by AID with respect to plaintiffs’ complaints, he personally did not observe or acquiesce in any sexual harassment, and he was not convinced that the AID decisions were motivated by sexual animus” 895 F.2d at 1481. However, the court also noted that “[t]his is not a case where there was a longstanding practice which was completely ignored by the policymaker who was absolved by the jury,” id. at 1482 – a caveat that suggests the possibility that in such a case constructive knowledge might play a role in the acquiescence analysis.

1 Bielevicz v. Dubinon, 915 F.2d 845 (3d Cir. 1990). Citing Andrews and Jett, the court stated that 2 the “plaintiff must show that an official who has the power to make policy is responsible for either
3 the affirmative proclamation of a policy or acquiescence in a well-settled custom.” Bielevicz, 914
4 F.2d at 850.⁷¹ But the Bielevicz court took care to note that “[t]his does not mean ... that the 5 responsible decisionmaker must be specifically identified by the plaintiff’s evidence. Practices so 6 permanent and well settled as to have the force of law [are] ascribable to municipal 7 decisionmakers.” Id. (internal quotation marks omitted).⁷² The Bielevicz court then proceeded to 8 discuss ways of showing that the municipal custom caused the constitutional violation, and 9 explained that policymakers’ failure to respond appropriately to known past violations could 10 provide the requisite evidence of causation: “If the City is shown to have tolerated known
11 misconduct by police officers, the issue whether the City’s inaction contributed to the individual 12 officers’ decision to arrest the plaintiffs unlawfully in this instance is a question of fact for the 13 jury.” Id. at 851. In Beck v. City of Pittsburgh, 89 F.3d 966, 971 (3d Cir. 1996), the court stated 14 that custom can be shown when government officials’ practices are “so permanent and well-settled 15 as to virtually constitute law,” id. (internal quotation marks omitted), and then continued:
16 “Custom . . . may also be established by evidence of knowledge and acquiescence.” *Id.*⁷³ In 17 holding that the plaintiffs were entitled to reach a jury on their claims, the Beck court focused on 18 evidence “that the Chief of Police of Pittsburgh and his department knew, or should have known,

⁷³ This language might be read to suggest that knowledge and acquiescence are merely one option for establishing a municipal custom. Likewise, in Fletcher v. O'Donnell, 867 F.2d 791 (3d Cir. 1989), the court, writing a few months before Jett was decided, stated that “[c]ustom may be established by proof of knowledge and acquiescence,” Fletcher, 867 F.2d at 793-94 (citing Pembaur, 475 U.S. at 481-82 n.10 (plurality opinion)) – an observation that arguably suggests there may also exist other means of showing custom. As discussed in the text, however, the Beck court seemed to focus its analysis on the question of actual or constructive knowledge.

4.6.6 Section 1983 – Municipalities – Custom

1 of Officer Williams's violent behavior in arresting citizens,” id. at 973 – suggesting that the Beck
2 court applied a constructive-knowledge test. Likewise, in Berg v. County of Allegheny, 219 F.3d
3 261 (2000), the court focused on whether municipal policymakers had either actual or constructive
4 knowledge of the practice for issuing warrants. See id. at 276 (“We believe it is a more than 5 reasonable inference to suppose that a system responsible for issuing 6,000 warrants a year would 6 be the product of a decision maker's action or acquiescence.”).

8 The Berg court stated, however, that where the custom in question does not itself constitute 9 the constitutional violation – but rather is alleged to have led to the violation – the plaintiff must 10 additionally meet the deliberate-indifference test set forth in City of Canton, Ohio v. Harris, 489
11 U.S. 378 (1989).⁷⁴ “If ... the policy or custom does not facially violate federal law, causation can 12 be established only by ‘demonstrat[ing] that the municipal action was taken with “deliberate 13 indifference” as to its known or obvious consequences.’” Berg, 219 F.3d at 276 (quoting Board 14 of County Comm'rs of Bryan County v. Brown, 520 U.S. 397, 407 (1997)); see also Natale v.
15 Camden County Correctional Facility 318 F.3d 575, 585 (3d Cir. 2003) (finding a jury question 16 on municipal liability because “the failure to establish a policy to address the immediate 17 medication needs of inmates with serious medical conditions creates a risk that is sufficiently 18 obvious as to constitute deliberate indifference to those inmates' medical needs”). Where a finding 19 of deliberate indifference is required, the first bracketed sentence in Instruction 4.6.6 should be 20 altered accordingly. Cases applying a deliberate-indifference standard for municipal liability often 21 involve allegations of failure to adequately train, supervise or screen, see, e.g., Montgomery v. De
22 Simone, 159 F.3d 120, 126-26 (3d Cir. 1998) (“[A] municipality's failure to train police officers

⁷⁴ Similarly, when he advocated a “scienter” requirement in Simmons, Judge Becker noted that he did not intend “to exclude from the scope of scienter's meaning a municipal policymaker's deliberately indifferent acquiescence in a custom or policy of inadequately training employees, even though ‘the need for more or different training is [very] obvious, and the inadequacy [quite] likely to result in the violation of constitutional rights.’” Simmons, 947 F.2d at 1061 n.14 (quoting City of Canton v. Harris, 489 U.S. 378, 390 (1989)). Judge Becker’s opinion did not provide details on the application of this standard to the Simmons case, because he found that the City had waived “the argument that plaintiff failed to establish the essential ‘scienter’ element of her case.” Id. at 1066. Chief Judge Sloviter wrote separately to explain, inter alia, her belief “that Judge Becker's emphasis on production by plaintiff of ‘scienter-like evidence’ when charging a municipality with deliberate indifference to deprivation of rights may impose on plaintiffs a heavier burden than mandated by the Supreme Court or prior decisions of this court.” Id. at 1089 (Sloviter, C.J., concurring in part and in the judgment). Chief Judge Sloviter stressed “that liability may be based on the City's (i.e., policymaker's) reckless refusal or failure to take account of facts or circumstances which responsible individuals should have known,” id. at 1090, and she pointed out that a standard requiring “actual knowledge of the conditions by a municipal policymaker ... would put a premium on blinders,” id. at 1091.

1 only gives rise to a constitutional violation when that failure amounts to deliberate indifference to 2 the rights of persons with whom the police come into contact.”). In cases where plaintiff seeks to 3 establish municipal liability for failure to adequately train or supervise a municipal employee, the 4 more specific standards set forth in Instruction 4.6.7 should be employed; Instruction 4.6.8 should 5 be used when the plaintiff asserts municipal liability for failure to screen.

10 As noted above, municipal liability can arise from an official policy that authorizes the 11 constitutional tort; such liability can also arise if the constitutional tort is caused by an official 12 policy of inadequate⁷⁶ training, supervision or investigation, or by a failure to adopt a needed 13 policy.⁷⁷ In the context of claims asserting such “liability through inaction,” Berg v. County of 14 Allegheny, 219 F.3d 261, 276 (3d Cir. 2000), the plaintiff will have to meet the additional hurdle 15 of showing “deliberate indifference” on the part of the municipality.⁷⁸ “[L]iability for failure to

⁷⁷ The Third Circuit has held that the failure to adopt a needed policy can result in municipal liability in an appropriate case, and has analyzed that question of municipal liability using the deliberate indifference test. See Natale v. Camden County Correctional Facility, 318 F.3d 575, 585 (3d Cir. 2003) (“A reasonable jury could conclude that the failure to establish a policy to address the immediate medication needs of inmates with serious medical conditions creates a risk that is sufficiently obvious as to constitute deliberate indifference to those inmates’ medical needs.”).

The Third Circuit has declined to “recognize[] municipal liability for a constitutional violation because of failure to equip police officers with non-lethal weapons.” Carswell v. Borough of Homestead, 381 F.3d 235, 245 (3d Cir. 2004) (“We decline to [recognize such liability] on the record before us.”).

⁷⁸ “If . . . the policy or custom does not facially violate federal law, causation can be established only by ‘demonstrat[ing] that the municipal action was taken with “deliberate indifference” as to its known or obvious consequences.’” Berg v. County of Allegheny, 219 F.3d 261, 276 (3d Cir. 2000) (quoting Board of County Com’rs of Bryan County, Okl. v. Brown, 520

2 indifference to the constitutional rights of [the municipality's] inhabitants.’” Groman v. Township
3 of Manalapan, 47 F.3d 628, 637 (3d Cir. 1995) (quoting City of Canton, Ohio v. Harris, 489 U.S.
4 378, 392 (1989)); see also City of Oklahoma City v. Tuttle, 471 U.S. 808, 823-24 (1985) (plurality
5 opinion) (holding that evidence of a single incident of shooting by police could not establish a
6 municipal policy of inadequate training); Brown v. Muhlenberg Township, 269 F.3d 205, 216 (3d
7 Cir.2001) (plaintiff “must present evidence that the need for more or different training was so
8 obvious and so likely to lead to the violation of constitutional rights that the policymaker's failure
9 to respond amounts to deliberate indifference”); Woloszyn v. County of Lawrence, 396 F.3d 314, 10 324-25 (3d Cir. 2005) (discussing failure-to-train standard in case involving suicide by pre-trial 11 detainee). The deliberate indifference test also applies to claims of “negligent supervision and 12 failure to investigate.” Groman, 47 F.3d at 637.

14 “A pattern of similar constitutional violations by untrained employees is ‘ordinarily 15 necessary’ to demonstrate deliberate indifference for purposes of failure to train.” Connick v.
17 Brown, 520 U.S. 397, 409 (1997)); see also Carswell v. Borough of Homestead, 381 F.3d 235, 244
18 (3d Cir. 2004) (“A plaintiff must identify a municipal policy or custom that amounts to deliberate
19 indifference to the rights of people with whom the police come into contact This typically 20 requires proof of a pattern of underlying constitutional violations Although it is possible, 21 proving deliberate indifference in the absence of such a pattern is a difficult task.”). Thus, for 22 example, evidence of prior complaints and of inadequate procedures for investigating such 23 complaints can suffice to create a jury question concerning municipal liability. See Beck, 89 F.3d
24 at 974-76 (reviewing evidence concerning procedures and holding that “Beck presented sufficient
25 evidence from which a reasonable jury could have inferred that the City of Pittsburgh knew about 26 and acquiesced in a custom tolerating the tacit use of excessive force by its police officers”). Cf.
27 City of Canton, 489 U.S. at 390 n.10 (“It could also be that the police, in exercising their discretion,
28 so often violate constitutional rights that the need for further training must have been plainly 29 obvious to the city policymakers, who, nevertheless, are ‘deliberately indifferent’ to the need.”) In 30 a “narrow range” of cases, Connick, 131 S. Ct. at 1366, deliberate indifference can be shown even 31 absent a pattern of prior violations by demonstrating that a constitutional violation was sufficiently 32 foreseeable: “[I]t may happen that in light of the duties assigned to specific officers or employees 33 the need for more or different training is so obvious, and the inadequacy so likely to result in the 34 violation of constitutional rights, that the policymakers of the city can reasonably be said to have 35 been deliberately indifferent to the need.” City of Canton, 489 U.S. at 390. In a post-Connick case, 36 Thomas v. Cumberland County, 749 F.3d 217 (3d Cir. 2014), the court of appeals found the 37 evidence sufficient for the claim to go to a jury under this standard. It held that “a reasonable jury

4.6.7 Section 1983 – Municipalities – Inadequate Training or Supervision

1 could conclude based on the frequency of fights and the volatile nature of the prison” that the 2 county was deliberately indifferent based on its failure to provide training in conflict de-escalation.

4 The Third Circuit has previously applied a three-part test to determine whether “a 5 municipality's failure to train or supervise to amount[s] to deliberate indifference”: Under this test, 6 “it must be shown that (1) municipal policymakers know that employees will confront a particular 7 situation; (2) the situation involves a difficult choice or a history of employees mishandling; and 8 (3) the wrong choice by an employee will frequently cause deprivation of constitutional rights.”
9 Carter v. City of Philadelphia, 181 F.3d 339, 357 (3d Cir. 1999).⁷⁹ Readers should note that a 10 substantially similar instruction was given in Connick, a case in which the closely-divided Court
11 held that the municipal defendant was entitled to judgment as a matter of law due to the plaintiff’s 12 failure to prove a pattern of similar violations. Because Connick states that such a pattern is 13 ordinarily needed in order to establish deliberate indifference in connection with a failure-to-train
14 claim, Instruction 4.6.7 no longer tracks the Carter instruction precisely: The second element no 15 longer offers as an alternative a finding that the situation “involved a difficult choice.” For the 16 narrow range of cases in which no pattern of similar violations is necessary, Instruction 4.6.7 can 17 be modified.

⁷⁹ In Doe v. Luzerne County, 660 F.3d 169 (3d Cir. 2011) – a post-Connick decision – the Court of Appeals quoted Carter’s three-part test and held that the evidence, taken in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, would not support a finding of municipal liability under that test. See Doe, 660 F.3d at 179-80.

3 Comment 4

5 Although inadequate screening during the hiring process can form the basis for municipal 6 liability, the Supreme Court has indicated that the deliberate indifference test must be applied
7 stringently in this context.⁸⁰ Where the plaintiff claims “that a single facially lawful hiring decision
8 launch[ed] a series of events that ultimately cause[d] a violation of federal rights , rigorous 9 standards of culpability and causation must be applied to ensure that the municipality is not held 10 liable solely for the actions of its employee.” Board of County Com'rs of Bryan County, Okl. v.
11 Brown, 520 U.S. 397, 405 (1997). In Brown, the Court held that the fact that a county sheriff hired 12 his nephew’s son as a reserve deputy sheriff without an adequate background check did not 13 establish municipal liability for the reserve deputy sheriff’s use of excessive force. The Court 14 indicated that one relevant factor was that the claim focused on a single hiring decision:
15

16 Where a claim of municipal liability rests on a single decision, not itself
17 representing a violation of federal law and not directing such a violation, the danger
18 that a municipality will be held liable without fault is high. Because the decision 19 necessarily governs a single case, there can be no notice to the municipal 20 decisionmaker, based on previous violations of federally protected rights, that his 21 approach is inadequate. Nor will it be readily apparent that the municipality's action
22 caused the injury in question, because the plaintiff can point to no other incident 23 tending to make it more likely that the plaintiff's own injury flows from the 24 municipality's action, rather than from some other intervening cause.

26 Id. at 408-09. The Court also drew a distinction between inadequate training cases and inadequate 27 screening cases:
28

29 The proffered analogy between failure-to-train cases and inadequate screening
30 cases is not persuasive. In leaving open in Canton the possibility that a plaintiff 31 might succeed in carrying a failure-to-train claim without showing a pattern of 32 constitutional violations, we simply hypothesized that, in a narrow range of ⁸⁰ The Court in Brown argued that it was not imposing a heightened test for inadequate screening cases. See Board of County Com'rs of Bryan County, Okl. v. Brown, 520 U.S. 397, 413 n.1 (1997) (“We do not suggest that a plaintiff in an inadequate screening case must show a higher degree of culpability than the ‘deliberate indifference’ required in Canton . . . ; we need not do so, because, as discussed below, respondent has not made a showing of deliberate indifference here.”). However, as discussed in the text of this Comment, the Court’s holding and reasoning in Brown reflect a stringent application of the deliberate indifference test.

4.6.8 Section 1983 Municipalities – Inadequate Screening

1 circumstances, a violation of federal rights may be a highly predictable 2 consequence of a failure to equip law enforcement officers with specific tools to 3 handle recurring situations. The likelihood that the situation will recur and the 4 predictability that an officer lacking specific tools to handle that situation will 5 violate citizens' rights could justify a finding that policymakers' decision not to 6 train the officer reflected "deliberate indifference" to the obvious consequence of 7 the policymakers' choice – namely, a violation of a specific constitutional or 8 statutory right. The high degree of predictability may also support an inference of 9 causation – that the municipality's indifference led directly to the very consequence 10 that was so predictable.

12 Where a plaintiff presents a § 1983 claim premised upon the inadequacy of 13 an official's review of a prospective applicant's record, however, there is a particular 14 danger that a municipality will be held liable for an injury not directly caused by a 15 deliberate action attributable to the municipality itself. Every injury suffered at the 16 hands of a municipal employee can be traced to a hiring decision in a "but-for"
17 sense: But for the municipality's decision to hire the employee, the plaintiff would 18 not have suffered the injury. To prevent municipal liability for a hiring decision 19 from collapsing into respondeat superior liability, a court must carefully test the 20 link between the policymaker's inadequate decision and the particular injury

23 Id. at 409-10. Thus, in the inadequate screening context,

24
25 [a] plaintiff must demonstrate that a municipal decision reflects deliberate 26 indifference to the risk that a violation of a particular constitutional or statutory 27 right will follow the decision. Only where adequate scrutiny of an applicant's 28 background would lead a reasonable policymaker to conclude that the plainly 29 obvious consequence of the decision to hire the applicant would be the deprivation 30 of a third party's federally protected right can the official's failure to adequately 31 scrutinize the applicant's background constitute "deliberate indifference."

33 Id. at 411; see id. at 412 ("[A] finding of culpability simply cannot depend on the mere probability 34 that any officer inadequately screened will inflict any constitutional injury. Rather, it must depend 35 on a finding that this officer was highly likely to inflict the particular injury suffered by the 36 plaintiff."); id. (question is "whether Burns' background made his use of excessive force in making 37 an arrest a plainly obvious consequence of the hiring decision").

39 Instruction 4.6.8 is designed for use in cases where the plaintiff alleges that the 40 municipality failed adequately to check the prospective employee's background. In some cases, 41 the asserted basis for liability may be, instead, that the municipality checked the prospective

1 employee’s background, learned of information indicating the risk that the person would commit
2 the relevant constitutional violation, and nonetheless hired the person. In such cases, Instruction
3 4.6.8 can be modified as needed to reflect the fact that ignoring known information also can form 4 the basis for an inadequate screening claim.

22 In most cases, questions of absolute immunity should be resolved by the judge prior to 23 trial. Instruction 4.7.1 will only rarely be necessary; it is designed to address cases in which some,
24 but not all, of the defendant’s alleged conduct would be covered by absolute immunity, and in 25 which evidence of the conduct covered by absolute immunity has been admitted for some purpose
26 other than demonstrating liability. In such a case, the jury should determine liability based on the 27 conduct not covered by absolute immunity. Instruction 4.7.1 provides a limiting instruction 28 specifically tailored to this issue; see also General Instruction 2.10 (Evidence Admitted for Limited 29 Purpose).

31 Prosecutors⁸¹ have absolute immunity from damages claims concerning prosecutorial
32 functions. “[A]cts undertaken by a prosecutor in preparing for the initiation of judicial proceedings
33 or for trial, and which occur in the course of his role as an advocate for the State, are entitled to 34 the protections of absolute immunity.” Buckley v. Fitzsimmons, 509 U.S. 259, 273 (1993); see 35 also Imbler v. Pachtman, 424 U.S. 409 (1976); Burns v. Reed, 500 U.S. 478, 492 (1991) (holding

4.7.1 Section 1983 – Conduct Not Covered by Absolute Immunity

1 that a prosecutor’s “appearance in court in support of an application for a search warrant and the 2 presentation of evidence at that hearing” were “protected by absolute immunity”). Moreover,
3 “supervision or training or information-system management” activities can qualify for absolute 4 immunity – even though such acts are administrative in nature – if the administrative action in 5 question “is directly connected with the conduct of a trial.” Van De Kamp v. Goldstein, 129 S. Ct.
6 855, 861-62 (2009); see id. at 858-59 (holding that absolute immunity “extends to claims that the 7 prosecution failed to disclose impeachment material ... due to: (1) a failure properly to train 8 prosecutors, (2) a failure properly to supervise prosecutors, or (3) a failure to establish an 9 information system containing potential impeachment material about informants”). Absolute 10 immunity does not apply, however, “[w]hen a prosecutor performs the investigative functions 11 normally performed by a detective or police officer,” Buckley, 509 U.S. at 273, or when a
12 prosecutor “provid[es] legal advice to the police,” Burns, 500 U.S. at 492, 496.⁸²

In Odd v. Malone, 538 F.3d 202 (3d Cir. 2008), “prosecuting attorneys obtained bench warrants to detain material witnesses whose testimony was vital to murder prosecutions. Although the attorneys diligently obtained the warrants, they neglected to keep the courts informed of the progress of the criminal proceedings and the custodial status of the witnesses.” Id. at 205. The Court of Appeals held that a prosecutor sued “for failing to notify the relevant authorities that the proceedings in which the detained individual was to testify had been continued for nearly four months,” id., did not qualify for absolute prosecutorial immunity; the court based this holding on the facts of the case, including the fact that the judge who issued the material witness warrant had directed the prosecutor to notify him of any delays in the murder prosecution but the prosecutor had failed to do so. Id. at 212-13. The Odd court also held (a fortiori) that a different prosecutor sued “for failing to notify the relevant authorities that the material witness remained incarcerated after the case in which he was to testify had been dismissed,” id. at 205, lacked absolute prosecutorial immunity. See id. at 215. In Schneyder v. Smith, 653 F.3d 313 (3d Cir. 2011), the Court of Appeals on a subsequent appeal adhered to its ruling that the prosecutor who allegedly failed to inform the court of the trial continuance lacked absolute immunity, see id. at 333-34. The Schneyder court reasoned that its ruling in Odd was consistent with the Supreme Court’s subsequent decision in Van de Kamp v. Goldstein, 129 S.

4.7.1 Section 1983 – Conduct Not Covered by Absolute Immunity

1 Judges possess absolute immunity from damages liability for “acts committed within their 2 judicial jurisdiction.” Pierson v. Ray, 386 U.S. 547, 554 (1967).⁸³ “[T]he factors determining 3 whether an act by a judge is a ‘judicial’ one relate to the nature of the act itself, i.e., whether it is 4 a function normally performed by a judge, and to the expectations of the parties, i.e., whether they 5 dealt with the judge in his judicial capacity.” Stump v. Sparkman, 435 U.S. 349, 362 (1978).⁸⁴
6 Judges do not possess absolute immunity with respect to claims arising from “the administrative,
7 legislative, or executive functions that judges may on occasion be assigned by law to perform.”
8 Forrester v. White, 484 U.S. 219, 227 (1988).

10 State or local legislators enjoy absolute immunity from suits seeking damages or injunctive

Ct. 855 (2009). Under Van de Kamp, “some administrative functions relate directly to the conduct of a criminal trial and are thus protected, while others ... are connected to trial only distantly (if at all) and are therefore not subject to immunity.” Schneyder, 653 F.3d at 334. The Schneyder court concluded that the prosecutor’s failure to inform the court of the trial continuance fell in the latter category: The failure was not “directly connected to the conduct of a trial,” and “[a]s the sole government official in possession of the relevant information, [the prosecutor] had a duty of disclosure that was neither discretionary nor advocative, but was instead a purely administrative act not entitled to the shield of immunity, even after Van de Kamp.” Schneyder, 653 F.3d at 334.

⁸⁴ Under the doctrine of “quasi-judicial” immunity, “government actors whose acts are relevantly similar to judging are immune from suit.” Dotzel v. Ashbridge, 438 F.3d 320, 325 (3d Cir. 2006); see id. at 322 (holding that “the members of the Board of Supervisors of Salem Township, Pennsylvania are immune from suits brought against them in their individual capacities relating to their decision to deny an application for a permit for a conditional use”); id. at 327 (stressing the need to “closely and carefully examine the functions performed by the board in each case”); Capogrosso v. Supreme Court of New Jersey, 588 F.3d 180, 185 (3d Cir. 2009) (holding that individual-capacity claims against Director and Disciplinary Counsel for New Jersey Advisory Committee on Judicial Conduct were barred by quasi-judicial immunity); Keystone Redev. Partners, LLC v. Decker, 631 F.3d 89, 90 (3d Cir. 2011) (holding that former members of Pennsylvania Gaming Control Board had quasi-judicial immunity from individual-capacity claims “based on their decisions to grant gaming licenses to certain applicants other than” the plaintiff).

4.7.1 Section 1983 – Conduct Not Covered by Absolute Immunity

1 remedies with respect to legislative acts. See Tenney v. Brandhove, 341 U.S. 367, 379 (1951)
2 (recognizing absolute immunity in case where state legislators “were acting in a field where 3 legislators traditionally have power to act”); Bogan v. Scott-Harris, 523 U.S. 44, 49 (1998)
4 (unanimous decision) (holding that “local legislators are . . . absolutely immune from suit under § 5 1983 for their legislative activities”).

7 The Court of Appeals has set forth a two-part test for legislative immunity in suits against 8 local officials: “To be legislative . . . , the act in question must be both substantively and 9 procedurally legislative in nature An act is substantively legislative if it involves 10 ‘policy-making of a general purpose’ or ‘line-drawing.’ . . . It is procedurally legislative if it is 11 undertaken ‘by means of established legislative procedures.’” In re Montgomery County, 215 F.3d 12 367, 376 (3d Cir. 2000) (quoting Carver v. Foerster, 102 F.3d 96, 100 (3d Cir. 1996)). Based on 13 the Supreme Court’s discussion in Bogan,⁸⁵ the Court of Appeals has questioned the two-part test’s
14 applicability to local officials⁸⁶ and has indicated that it does not govern claims against state
15 officials. See, e.g., Larsen v. Senate of Com. of Pa., 152 F.3d 240, 252 (3d Cir. 1998) (“[B]ecause
16 concerns for the separation of powers are often at a minimum at the municipal level, we decline to ⁸⁵ The Bogan Court declined to determine whether a procedurally legislative act by a local official must also be substantively legislative in order to qualify for legislative immunity: “Respondent . . . asks us to look beyond petitioners’ formal actions to consider whether the ordinance was legislative in substance. We need not determine whether the formally legislative character of petitioners’ actions is alone sufficient to entitle petitioners to legislative immunity, because here the ordinance, in substance, bore all the hallmarks of traditional legislation.” Bogan, 523 U.S. at 55.

⁸⁶ The Court of Appeals stated (in a case concerning claims against state legislators) that Bogan casts doubt on the propriety of using any separate test to examine municipal-level legislative immunity, see Bogan, 523 U.S. at 49 . . . (holding that local legislators are ‘likewise’ absolutely immune from suit under § 1983), particularly a two-part, substance/procedure test, id. at 55 . . . (refusing to require that an act must be ‘legislative in substance’ as well as of ‘formally legislative character’ in order to be a legislative act).

Youngblood v. DeWeese, 352 F.3d 836, 841 n.4 (2004); see also Fowler-Nash v. Democratic Caucus of Pa. House of Representatives, 469 F.3d 328, 339 (3d Cir. 2006) (stating, in a suit against state officials, that the Bogan Court “refused to insist that formally legislative acts, such as passing legislation, also be ‘legislative in substance’”).

4.7.1 Section 1983 – Conduct Not Covered by Absolute Immunity

1 extend our analysis developed for municipalities to other levels of government.”). More recently,
2 however, the Court of Appeals has held that “[r]egardless of the level of government, ... the 3 two-part substance/procedure inquiry is helpful in analyzing whether a non-legislator performing 4 allegedly administrative tasks is entitled to [legislative] immunity.” Baraka v. McGreevey, 481
5 F.3d 187, 199 (3d Cir. 2007) (addressing claims against New Jersey Governor and chair of the 6 New Jersey State Council for the Arts).⁸⁷

8 Law enforcement officers who serve as witnesses generally have absolute immunity from 9 claims concerning their testimony. See Briscoe v. LaHue, 460 U.S. 325, 345 (1983) (trial 10 testimony); Rehberg v. Paulk, 132 S. Ct. 1497, 1506 (2012) (grand jury testimony).⁸⁸

12 In addition to the immunities recognized by the Supreme Court, there may exist other 13 categories of absolute immunity. See, e.g., Ernst v. Child and Youth Services of Chester County, 14 108 F.3d 486, 488-89 (3d Cir. 1997) (holding that “child welfare workers and attorneys who 15 prosecute dependency proceedings on behalf of the state are entitled to absolute immunity from 16 suit for all of their actions in preparing for and prosecuting such dependency proceedings”); B.S.
17 v. Somerset County, 704 F.3d 250, 265 (3d Cir. 2013) (holding “that Ernst’s absolute immunity for 18 child welfare employees is appropriate when the employee in question ‘formulat[es] and present[s] 19 . . . recommendations to the court’ with respect to a child’s custody determination, even if those 20 recommendations are made outside the context of a dependency proceeding” (quoting Ernst, 108
21 F.3d at 495)).

⁸⁷ Prior to Baraka, the Court of Appeals had observed in Fowler-Nash v. Democratic Caucus of Pa. House of Representatives, 469 F.3d 328, 338 (3d Cir. 2006), that cases concerning local officials can be “instructive” in the court’s analysis of whether a state official’s actions were legislative in nature. See also id. at 332 (describing the “functional” test for legislative immunity); id. at 340 (holding that firing of state representative’s legislative assistant was administrative rather than legislative act). And another post-Larsen decision by the Court of Appeals did apply the two-part test to determine whether Pennsylvania Supreme Court justices had legislative immunity from claims arising from the termination of a plaintiff’s employment as the Executive Administrator of the First Judicial District of Pennsylvania. See Gallas v. Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, 211 F.3d 760, 776-77 (3d Cir. 2000). Gallas involved a question of legislative immunity because the plaintiff challenged a Pennsylvania Supreme Court order that eliminated the position of Executive Administrator of the First Judicial District of Pennsylvania. See id. at 766.

⁸⁸ Compare Malley v. Briggs, 475 U.S. 335, 344 (1986) (no absolute immunity for a police officer in connection with claim that his “request for a warrant allegedly caused an unconstitutional arrest”).

11 “[G]overnment officials performing discretionary functions generally are shielded from 12 liability for civil damages insofar as their conduct does not violate clearly established statutory or 13 constitutional rights of which a reasonable person would have known.” Harlow v. Fitzgerald, 457
 14 U.S. 800, 818 (1982). The analysis of qualified immunity involves two questions. One question
 15 is whether “the officer’s conduct violated a constitutional right.” Saucier v. Katz, 533 U.S. 194, 16 201 (2001).⁸⁹ Another question is whether any such constitutional right was “clearly established,” 17 and in particular, “whether it would be clear to a reasonable officer that his conduct was unlawful 18 in the situation he confronted.”⁹⁰ Id. at 201-02. It will often be useful for the court to address

⁸⁹ Violation of a clearly established state-law right does not defeat qualified immunity regarding the violation of federal law. Davis v. Scherer, 468 U.S. 183, 194 (1984). Nor do actions contrary to the officer’s training themselves “negate qualified immunity where it would otherwise be warranted.” City & Cnty. of San Francisco, Calif. v. Sheehan, 135 S. Ct. 1765, 1777 (2015); cf. Young v. Martin, 801 F.3d 172 (3d Cir. 2015) (holding that knowledge that one is violating prison regulations is relevant to determining whether defendants had fair warning that their treatment of an inmate was unconstitutional).

⁹⁰ “The contours of the right must be sufficiently clear that a reasonable official would understand that what he is doing violates that right. This is not to say that an official action is protected by qualified immunity unless the very action in question has previously been held unlawful . . . ; but it is to say that in the light of pre-existing law the unlawfulness must be apparent.” Anderson v. Creighton, 483 U.S. 635, 640 (1987). “[T]he salient question . . . is whether the state of the law [at the time of the conduct] gave respondents fair warning that their [conduct] was unconstitutional.” Hope v. Pelzer, 536 U.S. 730, 741 (2002). See also Brosseau v. Haugen, 543 U.S. 194, 198 (2004) (per curiam) (emphasizing the need for attention to context in judging whether application of a general principle was clear under the circumstances). The court of appeals has explained that “[t]o determine whether a new scenario is sufficiently analogous to previously established law to warn an official that his/her conduct is unconstitutional, we ‘inquir[e] into the general legal principles governing analogous factual situations ... and ...

4.7.2 Section 1983 – Qualified Immunity

determin[e] whether the official should have related this established law to the instant situation.” Burns v. PA Dep’t of Corrections, 642 F.3d 163, 177 (3d Cir. 2011) (quoting Hicks v. Feeney, 770 F.2d 375, 380 (3d Cir. 1985)).

Unlawfulness can be apparent “even in novel factual circumstances.” Hope v. Pelzer, 536 U.S. 730, 741 (2002); see also Groh v. Ramirez, 540 U.S. 551, 564 (2004) (“No reasonable officer could claim to be unaware of the basic rule, well established by our cases, that, absent consent or exigency, a warrantless search of the home is presumptively unconstitutional.”); Halsey v. Pfeiffer, 750 F.3d 273, 296 (3d Cir. 2014) (holding that even though it had not previously decided on the viability of a stand-alone claim for fabrication of evidence, reasonable officers should have known that “they certainly could not fabricate inculpatory evidence”); Schneyder v. Smith, 653 F.3d 313, 330 (3d Cir. 2011) (holding that a prosecutor’s alleged failure to inform a judge of the continuance of a trial for which the judge had ordered a material witness detained presented “one of those exceedingly rare cases in which the existence of the plaintiff’s constitutional right is so manifest that it is clearly established by broad rules and general principles”); Abbott v. Latshaw, 164 F.3d 141, 148 (3d Cir. 1998) (denying qualified immunity and noting that “it is the domain of the courts,” not law enforcement officers, “to decide who is entitled to possession of property,” that “citizens are to have a meaningful opportunity to be heard as to their rights before they are finally deprived of possession of property,” and that the officer’s “curbside courtroom, in which he decided who was entitled to possession, is precisely the situation and deprivation of rights to be avoided”); cf. Estate of Lagano v. Bergen Cnty. Prosecutor’s Office, 769 F.3d 850, 859 (3d Cir. 2014) (vacating grant of qualified immunity because plaintiff can overcome qualified immunity “without proving that we have previously issued a binding decision recognizing a state-created danger in the context of the disclosure of a confidential informant’s status”); L.R. v. School District of Philadelphia, 836 F.3d 235, 249 (3d Cir. 2016) (holding that a teacher who allowed a kindergarten student to leave the classroom with a stranger violated the clearly established right “to not be removed from a safe environment and placed into one in which it is clear that harm is likely to occur, particularly when the individual may, due to youth or other factors, be especially vulnerable to the risk of harm”).

Courts should not “define clearly established law at a high level of generality” and should not “cherry-pick[]” the aspects of Supreme Court opinions that would weigh in favor of the conclusion that a right was clearly established while ignoring reasons to think the right was not clearly established. Ashcroft v. Al-Kidd, 131 S. Ct. 2074, 2084-85 (2011); Safford Unified School Dist. No. 1 v. Redding, 129 S. Ct. 2633, 2644 (2009) (“[T]he cases viewing school strip searches differently from the way we see them are numerous enough, with well-reasoned majority and dissenting opinions, to counsel doubt that we were sufficiently clear in the prior statement of law.”); Stanton v. Sims, 134 S. Ct. 3 (2013) (summarily reversing for failure to recognize qualified immunity and stating that it is “especially troubling” that the court of appeals “would conclude that [the officer] was plainly incompetent – and subject to personal liability in damages – based on actions that were lawful according to courts in the jurisdiction where he acted”); Ray v. Township of Warren, 626 F.3d 170, 177 (3d Cir. 2010) (holding that the inapplicability of the community caretaking doctrine to warrantless entries into homes was not clearly established in light of, inter alia, “the conflicting precedents on this issue from other Circuits); Marcavage v. National Park Serv., 666 F.3d 856, 857, 859-60 (3d Cir. 2012) (holding that plaintiff’s conviction for misdemeanors stemming from events at issue supported qualified immunity defense of arresting officer and his supervisor, even though conviction was later reversed). See also White v. Pauly, 137 S. Ct. 548, 552 (2017) (reiterating the need to avoid a high level of generality and stating that the factual uniqueness of the case “alone should have been an important indication” that the defendant did not violate clearly established law).

Courts should also be cautious about concluding that the law is clearly established based only on one or two opinions from their own circuit. Taylor v. Barkes, 135 S. Ct. 2042 (2015) (summarily reversing Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit); Carroll v. Carman, 135 S. Ct. 348 (2014) (same). See also Mammaro v. New Jersey Div. of Child Prot. & Permanency, 814 F.3d 164, 171 (3d Cir. 2016) (distinguishing its one prior decision, putting aside the question of whether one such case would be sufficient, and noting that the district court was wrong to rely on an unpublished district court decision that postdated the events in the case). It is nonetheless possible for a principle of law to be clearly established, even if a member of the court does not believe that principle to be a correct statement of the law at all. In Mack v. Warden Loretto FCI, 839 F.3d 286 (3d Cir. 2016), while acknowledging that it had never before held that a prisoner’s oral grievance was constitutionally protected, the court nevertheless denied qualified immunity, holding that the right of a prisoner to be free from retaliatory termination of his job for exercising his right to petition was clearly established, over a dissent that would have held that, in the context of a prisoner’s retaliation claim, “oral complaints should not be considered protected conduct under the First Amendment.” Id. at 306. See also Groh v. Ramirez, 540 U.S. 551 (2004) (denying qualified immunity in a Fourth Amendment search case, over a dissent that found no constitutional violation).

Explaining its focus on reasonableness under the circumstances, the Court stated in Saucier that “[b]ecause ‘police officers are often forced to make split-second judgments – in circumstances that are tense, uncertain, and rapidly evolving – about the amount of force that is necessary in a particular situation,’ ... the reasonableness of the officer's belief as to the appropriate level of force should be judged from that on-scene perspective.” Saucier, 533 U.S. at 205 (quoting Graham v. Connor, 490 U.S. 386, 397 (1989)). See also Mammaro v. New Jersey Div. of Child Prot. & Permanency, 814 F.3d 164, 171 (3d Cir. 2016) (finding child protection caseworkers protected by qualified immunity and noting “that the failure to act quickly and decisively in these situations may have devastating consequences for vulnerable children”).

4.7.2 Section 1983 – Qualified Immunity

1 these questions in the order just stated, but on some occasions it will be preferable to adopt a 2 different ordering; the court has discretion on this matter. See Pearson v. Callahan, 129 S. Ct.
3 808, 818-21 (2009); Reichle v. Howards, 132 S. Ct. 2088, 2093 (2012); Plumhoff v. Rickard, 134
4 S. Ct. 2012 (2014) (addressing whether the officers’ conduct violated the Fourth Amendment and 5 explaining that doing so would be beneficial in developing constitutional precedent in an area that 6 courts typically consider in cases in which the defendant asserts a qualified immunity defense); 7 City & Cnty. of San Francisco v. Sheehan, 135 S. Ct. 1765, 1775 (2015) (declining to address the 8 Fourth Amendment issue “because this question has not been adequately briefed”).⁹¹ In any event,

Conversely, the court of appeals has suggested that qualified immunity analysis can take into account the fact that a defendant had time to deliberate before acting. See Reedy v. Evanson, 615 F.3d 197, 224 n.37 (3d Cir. 2010) (in the course of holding that summary judgment on qualified-immunity grounds was inappropriate, noting that “[t]here were no ‘split-second’ decisions made in this case”).

⁹¹ For example, the court of appeals has ruled that where the analysis of the federal constitutional claim depends on an underlying question of unsettled state law, the court can go straight to the question of whether the federal constitutional right claimed by the plaintiff was clearly established. As the court explained, the practice of first addressing whether there was a constitutional violation is designed to permit the development of the law by leading courts to define the contours of a constitutional right even in cases where such a right, if it exists, is not clearly established. In the court's view, "the underlying principle of law elaboration is not meaningfully advanced in situations ... when the definition of constitutional rights depends on a federal court's uncertain assumptions about state law." Egolf v. Witmer, 526 F.3d 104, 110 (3d Cir. 2008). Compare Zalogo v. Borough of Moosic, 841 F.3d 170, 171 (3d Cir. 2016) (declining to address the merits of the underlying constitutional question, noting that to do so would require grappling with the tension between the defendant’s right to speak and the plaintiff’s right to be free of government retaliation, and the “doctrine of constitutional avoidance counsels against unnecessarily wading into such muddy terrain”) with Williams v. Sec’y Pennsylvania Dep’t of Corr., 848 F.3d 549, 558 (3d Cir. 2017) (deciding to address the merits of the underlying constitution question because of its salience “to the ongoing societal debate about solitary confinement” and to provide “clear statements about what the law allows” to prison officials). The Pearson Court cited Egolf with apparent approval. See Pearson, 129 S. Ct. at 819. For a post-Pearson case following Egolf, see Montanez v. Thompson, 603 F.3d 243, 251 (3d Cir. 2010). For a case noting that under Pearson “district courts have wide discretion to decide which of the two prongs established in Saucier to address first,” see Kelly v. Borough of Carlisle, 622 F.3d 248, at 259 n.6 (3d Cir. 2010).

See also Schmidt v. Creedon, 639 F.3d 587, 598 n.17 (3d Cir. 2011) (“A district court’s error of law at step one of the Saucier procedure is relevant, but not dispositive, when

4.7.2 Section 1983 – Qualified Immunity

1 a “court may not deny a summary judgment motion premised on qualified immunity without 2 deciding that the right in question was clearly established at the time of the alleged wrongdoing.”
3 Spady v. Bethlehem Area Sch. Dist., 800 F.3d 633, 637 n.4 (3d Cir. 2015) (clarifying language
4 from an earlier opinion that had been decided after Saucier and before Pearson, as well as deciding 5 that the case was most easily resolved by addressing whether the right was clearly established, and 6 concluding that the right was not clearly established).

8 Even in a context where the underlying constitutional violation requires a showing of 9 objective unreasonableness, the issue of qualified immunity presents a distinct question. As the 10 Court explained in Saucier,

12 [t]he concern of the immunity inquiry is to acknowledge that reasonable mistakes
13 can be made as to the legal constraints on particular police conduct. It is sometimes 14 difficult for an officer to determine how the relevant legal doctrine, here excessive 15 force, will apply to the factual situation the officer confronts. An officer might 16 correctly perceive all of the relevant facts but have a mistaken understanding as to 17 whether a particular amount of force is legal in those circumstances. If the officer's 18 mistake as to what the law requires is reasonable, however, the officer is entitled to 19 the immunity defense.

23 Questions relating to qualified immunity should not be put to the jury “routinely”; rather,
24 “[i]mmunity ordinarily should be decided by the court long before trial.” Hunter v. Bryant, 502
25 U.S. 224, 228 (1991) (per curiam). If there are no disputes concerning the relevant historical facts, 26 then qualified immunity presents a question of law to be resolved by the court.

28 However, “a decision on qualified immunity will be premature when there are unresolved 29 disputes of historical fact relevant to the immunity analysis.” Curley v. Klem, 298 F.3d 271, 278 considering whether a right is clearly established. In some cases, a lower court's error is simply an oversight, rather than evidence that the law is not clearly established.”)

⁹² The Court of Appeals has distinguished between the underlying excessive-force inquiry and the qualified-immunity inquiry by characterizing the former as a question of fact and the latter as a question of law. See Curley v. Klem, 499 F.3d 199, 214 (3d Cir. 2007) (“Curley II”) (“[W]e think the most helpful approach is to consider the constitutional question as being whether the officer made a reasonable mistake of fact, while the qualified immunity question is whether the officer was reasonably mistaken about the state of the law.”).

4.7.2 Section 1983 – Qualified Immunity

1 (3d Cir. 2002) (“Curley I”); see also Reitz v. County of Bucks, 125 F.3d 139, 147 (3d Cir. 1997).
2 Material disputes of historical fact must be resolved by the jury at trial.⁹³ The question will then 3 arise whether the jury should decide only the questions of historical fact, or whether the jury should 4 also decide the question of objective reasonableness. See Curley I, 298 F.3d at 278 (noting that 5 “the federal courts of appeals are divided on the question of whether the judge or jury should 6 decide the ultimate question of objective reasonableness once all the relevant factual issues have 7 been resolved”). Some Third Circuit decisions have suggested that it can be appropriate to permit
8 the jury to decide objective reasonableness as well as the underlying questions of historical fact.
9 See, e.g., Sharrar v. Felsing, 128 F.3d 810, 830-31 (3d Cir. 1997) (noting with apparent approval 10 that the court in Karnes v. Skrutski, 62 F.3d 485 (3d Cir.1995), “held that a factual dispute relating 11 to qualified immunity must be sent to the jury, and suggested that, at the same time, the jury would 12 decide the issue of objective reasonableness”). On the other hand, the Third Circuit has also noted 13 that the court can “decide the objective reasonableness issue once all the historical facts are no 14 longer in dispute. A judge may use special jury interrogatories, for instance, to permit the jury to 15 resolve the disputed facts upon which the court can then determine, as a matter of law, the ultimate 16 question of qualified immunity.” Curley I, 298 F.3d at 279. And, more recently, the court has 17 suggested that this ultimate question must be reserved for the court, not the jury. See Carswell v.
18 Borough of Homestead, 381 F.3d 235, 242 (3d Cir. 2004) (“The jury ... determines disputed
19 historical facts material to the qualified immunity question.... District Courts may use special 20 interrogatories to allow juries to perform this function.... The court must make the ultimate 21 determination on the availability of qualified immunity as a matter of law.”).⁹⁴ Most recently, the 22 court has stated that submitting the ultimate question of qualified immunity to the jury constitutes 23 reversible error: “[W]hether an officer made a reasonable mistake of law and is thus entitled to 24 qualified immunity is a question of law that is properly answered by the court, not a jury.... When 25 a district court submits that question of law to a jury, it commits reversible error.” Curley v. Klem, ⁹³ See, e.g., Estate of Smith v. Marasco, 430 F.3d 140, 152-53 (3d Cir. 2005) (“Marcantino ... claimed that he gave Fetterolf no directions. At this stage, however, we must assume that a jury would credit Fetterolf’s version. If Marcantino did, in fact, approve the decision to enter the residence as well as the methods employed to do so, he is not entitled to qualified immunity.”). See also Tolan v. Cotton, 134 S.Ct. 1861 (2014) (per curiam) (emphasizing that the fundamental principle of summary judgment practice—that reasonable inferences should be drawn in favor of the nonmoving party—governs qualified immunity determinations).

⁹⁴ Admittedly, this statement in Carswell was dictum: The court in Carswell affirmed the district court’s grant of judgment as a matter of law at the close of plaintiff’s case in chief. See Carswell, 381 F.3d at 239, 245. See also Harvey v. Plains Twp. Police Dept., 421 F.3d 185, 194
 n. 12 (3d Cir. 2005) (citing Carswell and Curley I with approval).

1 499 F.3d 199, 211 (3d Cir. 2007) (“Curley II”).⁹⁵

3 The court, then, should not instruct the jury on qualified immunity.⁹⁶ Rather, the court
4 should determine (in consultation with counsel) what the disputed issues of historical fact are. The 5 court should submit interrogatories to the jury on those questions of historical fact. Often,
6 questions of historical fact will be relevant both to the existence of a constitutional violation and 7 to the question of objective reasonableness; as to such questions, the court should instruct the jury
8 that the plaintiff has the burden of proof.⁹⁷ (The court may wish to include those interrogatories 9 in the section of the verdict form that concerns the existence of a constitutional violation.) Other 10 questions of historical fact, however, may be relevant only to the question of objective
11 reasonableness; as to those questions, if any, the court should instruct the jury that the defendant
12 has the burden of proof. (The court may wish to include those interrogatories in a separate section 13 of the verdict form, after the sections concerning the prima facie case, and may wish to submit 14 those questions to the jury only if the jury finds for the plaintiff on liability.)

16 One question that may sometimes arise is whether jury findings on the defendant’s

⁹⁶ Though the Curley II court stressed that “that the second step in the Saucier analysis, i.e., whether an officer made a reasonable mistake about the legal constraints on police action and is entitled to qualified immunity, is a question of law that is exclusively for the court,” it noted in dictum the possibility of using the jury, in an advisory capacity, to determine questions relating to qualified immunity: “When the ultimate question of the objective reasonableness of an officer’s behavior involves tightly intertwined issues of fact and law, it may be permissible to utilize a jury in an advisory capacity ... but responsibility for answering that ultimate question remains with the court.” Curley II, 499 F.3d at 211 n.12.

⁹⁷ For a further discussion of burdens of proof in this context, see supra Comment 4.2.

4.7.2 Section 1983 – Qualified Immunity

1 subjective intent are relevant to the issue of qualified immunity. Decisions applying Harlow and 2 Harlow's progeny emphasize that the test for qualified immunity is an objective one, and that the 3 defendant's actual knowledge concerning the legality of the conduct is irrelevant.⁹⁸ Admittedly,
4 the reasons given in Harlow for rejecting the subjective test carry considerably less weight in the 5 context of a court's immunity decision based on a jury's findings than they do at earlier points in 6 the litigation: The Court stressed its concerns that permitting a subjective test would doom

Justice Brennan's concurrence in Harlow, quoting language from the majority opinion, asserted that the Court's standard “would not allow the official who actually knows that he was violating the law to escape liability for his actions, even if he could not ‘reasonably have been expected’ to know what he actually did know Thus the clever and unusually well-informed violator of constitutional rights will not evade just punishment for his crimes.” Harlow, 457 U.S. at 821 (Brennan, J., joined by Marshall & Blackmun, JJ., concurring). The quoted language from the majority opinion, however, appears to refer to cases in which the defendant's conduct in fact violated clearly established law:

If the law was clearly established, the immunity defense ordinarily should fail, since a reasonably competent public official should know the law governing his conduct. Nevertheless, if the official pleading the defense claims extraordinary circumstances and can prove that he neither knew nor should have known of the relevant legal standard, the defense should be sustained. But again, the defense would turn primarily on objective factors.

Harlow, 457 U.S. at 818-19.

In certain instances reliance on legal advice can constitute such an extraordinary circumstance. The court of appeals has held “that a police officer who relies in good faith on a prosecutor's legal opinion that [an] arrest is warranted under the law is presumptively entitled to qualified immunity from Fourth Amendment claims premised on a lack of probable cause.” Kelly v. Borough of Carlisle, 622 F.3d 248, 255-56 (3d Cir. 2010). However, “a plaintiff may rebut this presumption by showing that, under all the factual and legal circumstances surrounding the arrest, a reasonable officer would not have relied on the prosecutor's advice.” Id.

4.7.2 Section 1983 – Qualified Immunity

1 officials to intrusive discovery, see Harlow, 457 U.S. at 817 (noting that “[j]udicial inquiry into 2 subjective motivation therefore may entail broad-ranging discovery and the deposing of numerous
3 persons, including an official's professional colleagues”), and would impede the use of summary
4 judgment to dismiss claims on qualified immunity grounds, see id. at 818 (noting that “[r]eliance
5 on the objective reasonableness of an official's conduct, as measured by reference to clearly 6 established law, should avoid excessive disruption of government and permit the resolution of 7 many insubstantial claims on summary judgment”). Obviously, once a claim has reached a jury
8 trial, concerns about discovery and summary judgment are moot. In order to reach the trial stage, 9 the plaintiff must have successfully resisted summary judgment on qualified immunity grounds,
10 based on the application of the objective reasonableness test. And the plaintiff must have done so 11 without the benefit of discovery focused on the official’s subjective view of the legality of the 12 conduct. If, at trial, the jury finds that the defendant actually knew the conduct to be illegal, it
13 arguably would not contravene the policies stressed in Harlow if the court were to reject qualified 14 immunity based on such a finding. Nonetheless, the courts’ continuing emphasis on the notion 15 that the qualified immunity test excludes any element of subjective intent⁹⁹ raises the possibility 16 that reliance on the defendant’s actual knowledge could be held to be erroneous. As the Court has 17 explained, “a defense of qualified immunity may not be rebutted by evidence that the defendant's
18 conduct was malicious or otherwise improperly motivated. Evidence concerning the defendant's 19 subjective intent is simply irrelevant to that defense.” Crawford-El v. Britton, 523 U.S. 574, 588 20 (1998).

22 In some cases, however, the defendant’s motivation may be relevant to the plaintiff’s claim.
23 See id. In such cases, the circumstances relevant to the qualified immunity determination may 24 include the defendant’s subjective intent. For example, in a First Amendment retaliation case 25 argued and decided after Crawford-El, the Third Circuit explained:
26

⁹⁹ See, e.g., Berg v. County of Allegheny, 219 F.3d 261, 272 (3d Cir. 2000) (“The inquiry [concerning qualified immunity] is an objective one; the arresting officer's subjective beliefs about the existence of probable cause are not relevant.”). However, a qualified immunity analysis concerning probable cause will take into account what facts the defendant knew at the relevant time. See Gilles v. Davis, 427 F.3d 197, 206 (3d Cir. 2005) (“[W]hether it was reasonable to believe there was probable cause is in part based on the limited information that the arresting officer has at the time.”); see also Harvey v. Plains Twp. Police Dept., 421 F.3d 185, 194 (3d Cir. 2005) (stating in context of a Fourth Amendment claim that qualified immunity analysis “involv[es] consideration of both the law as clearly established at the time of the conduct in question and the information within the officer's possession at that time”); Blaylock v. City of Philadelphia, 504 F.3d 405, 411 (3d Cir. 2007) (citing Hunter v. Bryant, 502 U.S. 224, 228-29 (1991), and Anderson v. Creighton, 483 U.S. 635, 641 (1987)); Burns v. PA Dep’t of Corrections, 642 F.3d 163, 177 & n.12 (3d Cir. 2011).

4.7.2 Section 1983 – Qualified Immunity

1 The qualified immunity analysis requires a determination as to whether reasonable 2 officials could believe that their conduct was not unlawful even if it was in fact
3 unlawful. . . . In the context of a First Amendment retaliation claim, that 4 determination turns on an inquiry into whether officials reasonably could believe 5 that their motivations were proper even when their motivations were in fact 6 retaliatory. Even assuming that this could be demonstrated under a certain set of 7 facts, it is an inquiry that cannot be conducted without factual determinations as to 8 the officials' subjective beliefs and motivations

10 Larsen v. Senate of Com. of Pa., 154 F.3d 82, 94 (3d Cir. 1998); see also Monteiro v. City of 11 Elizabeth, 436 F.3d 397, 404 (3d Cir. 2006) (“In cases in which a constitutional violation depends 12 on evidence of a specific intent, ‘it can never be objectively reasonable for a government official 13 to act with the intent that is prohibited by law’” (quoting Locurto v. Safir, 264 F.3d 154, 169 (2d 14 Cir. 2001)). In some cases where the plaintiff must meet a stringent test (on the merits) concerning 15 the defendant’s state of mind, the jury’s finding that the defendant had that state of mind forecloses
16 a defense of qualified immunity.¹⁰⁰ In those cases, the jury’s decision on the defendant’s state of ¹⁰⁰ See Monteiro, 436 F.3d at 405 (“Perkins-Auguste's argument that she could have conceivably (and constitutionally) ejected Monteiro on the basis of his disruptions is unavailing in the face of a jury verdict concluding that she acted with a motive to suppress Monteiro's speech on the basis of viewpoint.”).

Similarly, the Eleventh Circuit noted Saucier’s holding that the qualified immunity inquiry is distinct from the merits of the claim, but explained:

It is different with claims arising from the infliction of excessive force on a prisoner in violation of the Eighth Amendment Cruel and Unusual Punishment Clause. In order to have a valid claim ... the excessive force must have been sadistically and maliciously applied for the very purpose of causing harm. Equally important, it is clearly established that all infliction of excessive force on a prisoner sadistically and maliciously for the very purpose of causing harm and which does cause harm violates the Cruel and Unusual Punishment Clause. So, where this type of constitutional violation is established there is no room for qualified immunity. It is not just that this constitutional tort involves a subjective element, it is that the subjective element required to establish it is so extreme that every conceivable set of circumstances in which this constitutional violation occurs is clearly established to be a violation of the Constitution

Johnson v. Breeden, 280 F.3d 1308, 1321-22 (11th Cir. 2002).

1 mind will also determine the qualified immunity question.¹⁰¹

The Supreme Court’s decision in Saucier does not necessarily undermine the Third Circuit’s reasoning in Beers-Capitol. Admittedly, the Third Circuit decided Beers-Capitol a week before the Supreme Court decided Saucier; but Saucier’s holding (concerning Fourth Amendment excessive force claims) followed the earlier holding in Anderson v. Creighton, 483 U.S. 635, 640 (1987) (concerning Fourth Amendment search claims). Anderson and Saucier can be distinguished from Beers-Capitol. Because an official can make a reasonable mistake as to whether a particular action is reasonable, qualified immunity is available even where the contours of the relevant constitutional right depend “upon an assessment of what accommodation between governmental need and individual freedom is reasonable.” Anderson, 483 U.S. at 644. By contrast, if the relevant constitutional standard requires that the defendant actually knew of an excessive risk (as in the case of an Eighth Amendment violation), qualified immunity seems paradoxical: It is difficult to argue that a reasonable officer in the defendant’s shoes could not be expected to know the defendant’s conduct was unlawful when the defendant actually knew of the excessive risk.

However, the Supreme Court’s subsequent decision in Hope v. Pelzer, 536 U.S. 730 (2002), does raise some doubt as to the validity of the Third Circuit’s conclusion. In Hope, the Court held that the plaintiff’s allegations, if true, established an Eighth Amendment claim. See id. at 737-38. In doing so, it referred both to deliberate indifference (suggesting that it was applying a conditions of confinement analysis) and to the gratuitous infliction of wanton and unnecessary pain (suggesting that it was applying an excessive force analysis). Id. It then proceeded to analyze whether it would have been clear to a reasonable official under the circumstances that the conduct at issue violated a clearly established constitutional right, see id. at 739. Although the majority ultimately concluded that the defendants were not entitled to qualified immunity, it did so on the ground that caselaw, a state regulation and a DOJ report should have made it obvious to a reasonable official that the conduct was unconstitutional. See id. at 741-42. If a showing of Eighth Amendment deliberate indifference (or the gratuitous infliction of wanton and unnecessary pain) automatically negates a defendant’s claim of qualified immunity, then the Court could have relied upon that ground to reverse the grant of summary judgment to the defendants in Hope; thus, the fact that the Court instead analyzed the question of qualified immunity without mentioning the possible relevance of the showing of deliberate

1 Not all Section 1983 defendants will be entitled to assert a qualified immunity defense.
2 See, e.g., Richardson v. McKnight, 521 U.S. 399, 401 (1997) (holding that “prison guards who are 3 employees of a private prison management firm” are not “entitled to a qualified immunity from 4 suit by prisoners charging a violation of 42 U.S.C. § 1983”); Wyatt v. Cole, 504 U.S. 158, 159
5 (1992) (holding that “private defendants charged with 42 U.S.C. § 1983 liability for invoking state
6 replevin, garnishment, and attachment statutes later declared unconstitutional” cannot claim
7 qualified immunity); Owen v. City of Independence, Mo., 445 U.S. 622, 657 (1980) (holding that 8 “municipalities have no immunity from damages liability flowing from their constitutional 9 violations”). But see Filarsky v. Delia, 132 S. Ct. 1657, 1665, 1667-68 (2012) (reasoning that 10 “immunity under § 1983 should not vary depending on whether an individual working for the 11 government does so as a full-time employee, or on some other basis,” and holding that a private 12 attorney hired by a municipality to help conduct an administrative investigation was entitled to 13 assert qualified immunity).

14
15 The Court has left undecided whether private defendants who cannot claim qualified 16 immunity should be able to claim “good faith” immunity. See Wyatt, 504 U.S. at 169 (“[W]e do
17 not foreclose the possibility that private defendants faced with § 1983 liability ... could be entitled 18 to an affirmative defense based on good faith and/or probable cause or that § 1983 suits against 19 private, rather than governmental, parties could require plaintiffs to carry additional burdens.”);
20 id. at 169-75 (Kennedy, J., joined by Scalia, J., concurring) (arguing in favor of a good faith 21 defense); Richardson, 521 U.S. at 413 (declining to determine “whether or not . . . private 22 defendants . . . might assert, not immunity, but a special ‘good-faith’ defense”). Taking up the 23 issue thus left open in Wyatt, the Third Circuit has held that “private actors are entitled to a defense indifference (or the gratuitous infliction of wanton and unnecessary pain) suggests that the Court did not view that showing as dispositive of the qualified immunity question. On the other hand, the plaintiff in Hope apparently did not argue that the showing of deliberate indifference (or the gratuitous infliction of wanton and unnecessary pain) negated the claim of qualified immunity, so it may be that the Court simply did not consider that theory in deciding Hope. (In Whitley v. Albers, 475 U.S. 312 (1986), the court of appeals had stated that “[a] finding of [Eighth Amendment] deliberate indifference is inconsistent with a finding of ... qualified immunity,” Albers v. Whitley, 743 F.2d 1372, 1376 (9th Cir. 1984), but the Supreme Court refused to address this contention because the Court reversed the judgment on other grounds, see 475 U.S. at 327-28.) In Young v. Martin, 801 F.3d 172 (3d Cir. 2015), the court of appeals decided that Hope was best read as an excessive force case, reversed summary judgment for defendants on the merits of the Eighth Amendment claim, and remanded for consideration of the qualified immunity question. It did not address whether it is possible to find that a defendant who gratuitously inflicted wanton and unnecessary pain was nonetheless entitled to qualified immunity.

4.7.2 Section 1983 – Qualified Immunity

1 of subjective good faith.” Jordan v. Fox, Rothschild, O’Brien & Frankel, 20 F.3d 1250, 1277 (3d
2 Cir. 1994). The discussion in Jordan focused on the question in the context of a due process claim
3 arising from a creditor’s execution on a judgment. See id. at 1276 (explaining that “a creditor’s
4 subjective appreciation that its act deprives the debtor of his constitutional right to due process”
5 would show an absence of good faith).

1 4.7.3 Section 1983 – Affirmative Defenses –
2 Release-Dismissal Agreement

4 Model

6 [Defendant] asserts that [plaintiff] agreed to release [plaintiff’s] claims against [defendant],
7 in exchange for the dismissal of the criminal charges against [plaintiff]. In order to rely on such a 8 release as a defense against [plaintiff’s] claims, [defendant] must prove both of the following 9 things:

11 First, [defendant] must prove that the prosecutor acted for a valid public purpose when 12 [he/she] sought a release from [plaintiff]. [Defendant] asserts that the prosecutor sought the release 13 because the prosecutor [wanted to protect the complaining witness from having to testify at 14 [defendant’s] trial]. I instruct you that [protecting the complaining witness from having to testify 15 at trial] is a valid public purpose; you must decide whether that purpose actually was the 16 prosecutor’s purpose in seeking the release. In other words, [defendant] must prove by a 17 preponderance of the evidence that the reason the prosecutor sought the release from [plaintiff]
18 was [to protect the complaining witness from having to testify at trial].

20 Second, [defendant] must prove [by clear and convincing evidence]¹⁰² [by a preponderance 21 of the evidence]¹⁰³ that [plaintiff] agreed to the release and that [plaintiff’s] decision to agree to 22 the release was deliberate, informed and voluntary.¹⁰⁴ To determine whether [plaintiff] made a 23 deliberate, informed and voluntary decision to agree to the release, you should consider all relevant 24 circumstances, including [list any of the following factors, and any other factors, warranted by the 25 evidence]:

- 26
27 • The words of the written release that [plaintiff] signed;
28 • Whether [plaintiff] was in custody at the time [he/she] entered into the release;

¹⁰² If the release was oral, the defendant must prove voluntariness by clear and convincing evidence.

¹⁰³ The Court of Appeals has not determined the appropriate standard of proof of voluntariness in the case of a written release.

¹⁰⁴ If more than one defendant seeks to assert the release as a defense, the court, if the plaintiff so requests, should require the jury to consider voluntariness with respect to potential claims against each specific defendant. See Livingstone v. North Belle Vernon Borough, 91 F.3d 515, 526 n.13 (3d Cir. 1996).

4.7.3 Release-Dismissal Agreement

- Whether [plaintiff's] background and experience helped [plaintiff] to understand the terms of the release;
- Whether [plaintiff] was represented by a lawyer, and if so, whether [plaintiff's] lawyer wrote the release;
- Whether [plaintiff] agreed to the release immediately or whether [plaintiff] took time to think about it;
- Whether [plaintiff] expressed any unwillingness to enter into the release; and
- Whether the terms of the release were clear.

Comment

The validity of release-dismissal agreements waiving potential Section 1983 claims is reviewed on a case-by-case basis. See Town of Newton v. Rumery, 480 U.S. 386, 392 (1987).¹⁰⁵ To be enforced, the agreement must be “executed voluntarily, free from prosecutorial misconduct and not offensive to the relevant public interest.” Cain v. Darby Borough, 7 F.3d 377, 380 (3d Cir. 1993) (in banc) (citing Rumery).

The defense has the burden of showing voluntariness, see Livingstone v. North Belle Vernon Borough, 12 F.3d 1205, 1211 (3d Cir. 1993) (in banc), and if the release was oral rather than written then voluntariness must be proven by clear and convincing evidence, see Livingstone v. North Belle Vernon Borough, 91 F.3d 515, 534-36 (3d Cir. 1996); see also Livingstone, 12 F.3d at 1212-13 (noting reasons why written releases are preferable).¹⁰⁶ The inquiry is fact-specific. See Livingstone, 12 F.3d at 1210-11 (listing types of factors relevant to voluntariness). To the extent that the question whether the plaintiff made a “deliberate, informed and voluntary waiver” presents issues of witness credibility concerning the plaintiff’s state of mind, the question should be submitted to the jury. Livingstone, 12 F.3d at 1215 n.9.

The defense must also show “that upon balance the public interest favors enforcement.”

¹⁰⁶ See also Livingstone, 91 F.3d at 536 n.34 (declining to “address the appropriate standard of proof for enforcement of a written release-dismissal agreement”).

4.7.3 Release-Dismissal Agreement

1 Cain, 7 F.3d at 381; see also Livingstone, 12 F.3d at 1215 (discussing possible public interest
2 rationales for releases); Livingstone, 91 F.3d at 527 (noting the “countervailing interest ... in 3 detecting and deterring official misconduct”); id. at 528-29 (assessing possible rationales).¹⁰⁷ “The 4 standard for determining whether a release meets the public interest requirement is an objective
5 one, based upon the facts known to the prosecutor when the agreement was reached.” Cain, 7 F.3d
6 at 381. Moreover, “the public interest reason proffered by the prosecutor must be the prosecutor’s
7 actual reason for seeking the release.” Id.; see also Livingstone, 91 F.3d at 530 n.17. If, instead,
8 “the decision to pursue a prosecution, or the subsequent decision to conclude a release-dismissal 9 agreement, was motivated by a desire to protect public officials from liability,” the release should 10 not be enforced. Livingstone, 91 F.3d at 533.¹⁰⁸

12 “[P]rotecting public officials from civil suits may in some cases provide a valid public 13 interest and justify the enforcement of a release-dismissal agreement.” Cain, 7 F.3d at 383. But 14 “there must first be a case-specific showing that the released civil rights claims appeared to be 15 marginal or frivolous at the time the agreement was made and that the prosecutor was in fact 16 motivated by this reason.” *Id.*¹⁰⁹ Whether the claims appeared to be marginal or frivolous should 17 be assessed on the basis of the information that the prosecutor “knew or should have known” at 18 the time. Livingstone, 91 F.3d at 532. If the claims did appear marginal or frivolous based on the 19 information that the prosecutor knew and/or should have known, the court should then address 20 “the further question whether enforcement of a release-dismissal agreement in the face of 21 substantial evidence of police misconduct would be compatible with Rumery and Cain, 22 notwithstanding that the evidence of misconduct was not known, or reasonably knowable, by the 23 prosecutor at the time.” Livingstone, 91 F.3d at 532.

Rev. 851, 928 (1988) (noting that release-dismissal agreements pose “a substantial cost to first amendment rights, the integrity of the criminal process, and the purposes served by section 1983”).

¹⁰⁹ “As a general matter, civil rights claims based on substantial evidence of official misconduct will not be either marginal or frivolous. But this may not be true in every case. For instance, if the official involved would clearly have absolute immunity for the alleged misconduct, then a subsequent civil rights suit might indeed be marginal, whether or not there is substantial evidence that the misconduct occurred.” Livingstone, 91 F.3d at 530 n.18.

4.7.3 Release-Dismissal Agreement

1 The objective inquiry (whether there existed a valid public interest in the release) is for the 2 court,¹¹⁰ but the subjective inquiry (whether that interest was the prosecutor’s actual reason) is for 3 the jury. See Livingstone, 12 F.3d at 1215. “The party seeking to enforce the release-dismissal
4 agreement bears the burden of proof on both of these elements.” Livingstone, 91 F.3d at 527.

¹¹⁰ “The process of weighing the evidence of police misconduct against the prosecutor's asserted reasons for concluding a release-dismissal agreement is part of the broad task of balancing the public interests that favor and that disfavor enforcement. That task is one for the court.” Livingstone, 91 F.3d at 533 n.28.

6 I am now going to instruct you on damages. Just because I am instructing you on how to 7 award damages does not mean that I have any opinion on whether or not [defendant] should be 8 held liable.

10 If you find [defendant] liable, then you must consider the issue of compensatory damages.
11 You must award [plaintiff] an amount that will fairly compensate [him/her] for any injury [he/she] 12 actually sustained as a result of [defendant’s] conduct.

14 [Plaintiff] must show that the injury would not have occurred without [defendant’s] act [or 15 omission]. [Plaintiff] must also show that [defendant’s] act [or omission] played a substantial part 16 in bringing about the injury, and that the injury was either a direct result or a reasonably probable 17 consequence of [defendant’s] act [or omission]. [There can be more than one cause of an injury.
18 To find that [defendant’s] act [or omission] caused [plaintiff’s] injury, you need not find that 19 [defendant’s] act [or omission] was the nearest cause, either in time or space. However, if 20 [plaintiff’s] injury was caused by a later, independent event that intervened between [defendant’s]
21 act [or omission] and [plaintiff’s] injury, [defendant] is not liable unless the injury was reasonably 22 foreseeable by [defendant].]

24 Compensatory damages must not be based on speculation or sympathy. They must be 25 based on the evidence presented at trial, and only on that evidence. Plaintiff has the burden of 26 proving compensatory damages by a preponderance of the evidence.

28 [Plaintiff] claims the following items of damages [include any of the following – and any 29 other items of damages – that are warranted by the evidence and permitted under the law
30 governing the specific type of claim]:

- 31
- 32 • Physical harm to [plaintiff] during and after the events at issue, including ill health, 33 physical pain, disability, disfigurement, or discomfort, and any such physical harm that 34 [plaintiff] is reasonably certain to experience in the future. In assessing such harm, you 35 should consider the nature and extent of the injury and whether the injury is temporary or 36 permanent.
 - 37
 - 38 • Emotional and mental harm to [plaintiff] during and after the events at issue, including 39 fear, humiliation, and mental anguish, and any such emotional and mental harm that

4.8.1 Section 1983 –Compensatory Damages

1 [plaintiff] is reasonably certain to experience in the future.¹¹¹

- 3 • The reasonable value of the medical [psychological, hospital, nursing, and similar] care
4 and supplies that [plaintiff] reasonably needed and actually obtained, and the present
5 value¹¹² of such care and supplies that [plaintiff] is reasonably certain to need in the future.
- 7 • The [wages, salary, profits, reasonable value of the working time] that [plaintiff] has lost
8 because of [his/her] inability [diminished ability] to work, and the present value of the 9 [wages, etc.] that [plaintiff] is reasonably certain to lose in the future because of [his/her] 10 inability [diminished ability] to work.
11
- 12 • The reasonable value of property damaged or destroyed.
13
- 14 • The reasonable value of legal services that [plaintiff] reasonably needed and actually 15 obtained to defend and clear [him/her]self.¹¹³
16
- 17 • The reasonable value of each day of confinement after the time [plaintiff] would have been 18 released if [defendant] had not taken the actions that [plaintiff] alleges.¹¹⁴

¹¹¹ “[E]xpert medical evidence is not required to prove emotional distress in section 1983 cases.” Bolden v. Southeastern Pennsylvania Transp. Authority, 21 F.3d 29, 36 (3d Cir. 1994). However, the plaintiff must present competent evidence showing emotional distress. See Chainey v. Street, 523 F.3d 200, 216 (3d Cir. 2008). And in suits filed by prisoners, the court should ensure that the instructions on emotional and mental injury comply with 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(e). See Comment.

¹¹² The Court of Appeals has not discussed whether and how the jury should be instructed concerning the present value of future damages in Section 1983 cases. For instructions concerning present value (and a discussion of relevant issues), see Instruction 5.4.4 and its Comment.

¹¹⁴ See Sample v. Diecks, 885 F.2d 1099, 1112 (3d Cir. 1989) (upholding award of

4.8.1 Section 1983 –Compensatory Damages

1 [Each plaintiff has a duty under the law to "mitigate" his or her damages – that means that 2 the plaintiff must take advantage of any reasonable opportunity that may have existed under the 3 circumstances to reduce or minimize the loss or damage caused by the defendant. It is 4 [defendant's] burden to prove that [plaintiff] has failed to mitigate. So if [defendant] persuades
5 you by a preponderance of the evidence that [plaintiff] failed to take advantage of an opportunity 6 that was reasonably available to [him/her], then you must reduce the amount of [plaintiff's]
7 damages by the amount that could have been reasonably obtained if [he/she] had taken advantage
8 of such an opportunity.]

10 [In assessing damages, you must not consider attorney fees or the costs of litigating this 11 case. Attorney fees and costs, if relevant at all, are for the court and not the jury to determine.
12 Therefore, attorney fees and costs should play no part in your calculation of any damages.]

17 “[W]hen § 1983 plaintiffs seek damages for violations of constitutional rights, the level of 18 damages is ordinarily determined according to principles derived from the common law of torts.”
19 Memphis Community School Dist. v. Stachura, 477 U.S. 299, 306 (1986); see also Allah v.
20 Al-Hafeez, 226 F.3d 247, 250 (3d Cir. 2000) (“It is well settled that compensatory damages under 21 § 1983 are governed by general tort-law compensation theory.”).¹¹⁵ compensatory damages for “each day of confinement after the time Sample would have been released if Diecks had fulfilled his duty to Sample”).

¹¹⁵ The Third Circuit has noted the potential relevance of 42 U.S.C. § 1988 to the question of damages in Section 1983 cases. See Fontroy v. Owens, 150 F.3d 239, 242 (3d Cir.
1998). The Fontroy court relied on the approach set forth by the Supreme Court in a case addressing statute of limitations issues:

First, courts are to look to the laws of the United States "so far as such laws are suitable to carry [the civil and criminal civil rights statutes] into effect." If no suitable federal rule exists, courts undertake the second step by considering application of state "common law, as modified and changed by the constitution and statutes" of the forum State. A third step asserts the predominance of the federal interest: courts are to apply state law only if it is not "inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States."

Fontroy, 150 F.3d at 242-43 (quoting Burnett v. Grattan, 468 U.S. 42, 47-48 (1984) (quoting 42
U.S.C. § 1988(a)); compare Seth F. Kreimer, The Source of Law in Civil Rights Actions: Some Old Light on Section 1988, 133 U. Pa. L. Rev. 601, 620 (1985) (arguing that Section 1988's

4.8.1 Section 1983 –Compensatory Damages

1 “[A] Section 1983 plaintiff must demonstrate that the defendant's actions were the 2 proximate cause of the violation of his federally protected right.” Rivas v. City of Passaic, 365
3 F.3d 181, 193 (3d Cir. 2004) (discussing defendants’ contentions that their conduct did not 4 “proximately cause[] [the decedent’s] death”). The requirement is broadly equivalent to the tort
5 law’s concept of proximate cause. See, e.g., Hedges v. Musco, 204 F.3d 109, 121 (3d Cir. 2000)
6 (“It is axiomatic that ‘[a] § 1983 action, like its state tort analogs, employs the principle of 7 proximate causation.’”) (quoting Townes v. City of New York, 176 F.3d 138, 146 (2d Cir. 1999));
8 Johnson v. Philadelphia, 837 F.3d 343, 352 (3d Cir. 2016) (holding that even if a police officer 9 acted unreasonably in his initial approach to an obviously disturbed man, the causal chain between 10 that initial approach and the officer’s killing of that man was broken by the man’s “sudden, 11 unexpected attack that instantly forced the officer into a defensive fight for his life” and that 12 included the man attempting to grab the officer’s gun out of its holster). Thus, Instruction 4.8.1
13 reflects general tort principles concerning causation and compensatory damages.

15 With respect to future injury, the Eighth Circuit’s model instructions require that the 16 plaintiff prove the injury is “reasonably certain” to occur. See Eighth Circuit (Civil) Instruction
17 4.51. Although the Committee is not aware of Third Circuit caselaw directly addressing this issue, 18 some precedents from other circuits do provide support for such a requirement. See Stengel v.
19 Belcher, 522 F.2d 438, 445 (6th Cir. 1975) (“The Court properly instructed the jury that Stengel
20 could recover damages only for injury suffered as a proximate result of the shooting, and for future
21 damages which were reasonably certain to occur.”), cert. dismissed, 429 U.S. 118 (1976); 22 Henderson v. Sheahan, 196 F.3d 839, 849 (7th Cir. 1999) (“Damages may not be awarded on the 23 basis of mere conjecture or speculation; a plaintiff must prove that there is a reasonable certainty 24 that the anticipated harm or condition will actually result in order to recover monetary 25 compensation.”); cf. Slicker v. Jackson, 215 F.3d 1225, 1232 (11th Cir. 2000) (“[A]n award of 26 nominal damages may be appropriate when the plaintiff’s injuries have no monetary value or when 27 they are not quantifiable with reasonable certainty.”). On the other hand, language in some other 28 opinions suggest that something less than “reasonable certainty,” such as “reasonable likelihood,” 29 might suffice. See, e.g., Ruiz v. Gonzalez Caraballo, 929 F.2d 31, 35 (1st Cir. 1991) (in assessing 30 jury’s award of damages, taking into account evidence that the plaintiff’s “post-traumatic stress 31 syndrome would likely require extensive future medical treatment at appreciable cost”); Lawson 32 v. Dallas County, 112 F.Supp.2d 616, 636 (N.D. Tex. 2000) (plaintiff is “entitled to recover reference to “common law” denotes “general common law,” not state common law).

As noted in the text, the Supreme Court has addressed a number of questions relating to the damages available in Section 1983 actions without making Section 1988 the focus of its analysis. See, e.g., Carey v. Piphus, 435 U.S. 247, 258 n.13 (1978) (applying the tort principle of compensation in a procedural due process case and stating in passing, in a footnote, that “42 U.S.C. § 1988 authorizes courts to look to the common law of the States where this is ‘necessary to furnish suitable remedies’ under § 1983”).

4.8.1 Section 1983 –Compensatory Damages

1 compensatory damages for the physical injury, pain and suffering, and mental anguish that he has 2 suffered in the past – and is reasonably likely to suffer in the future – because of the defendants' 3 wrongful conduct”), aff’d, 286 F.3d 257 (5th Cir. 2002).

5 The court should take care not to suggest that the jury could award damages based on “the 6 abstract value of [the] constitutional right.” Stachura, 477 U.S. at 308. If a constitutional violation
7 has not caused actual damages, nominal damages are the appropriate remedy. See id. at 308 n.11;
8 infra Instruction 4.8.2. However, “compensatory damages may be awarded once the plaintiff 9 shows actual injury despite the fact the monetary value of the injury is difficult to ascertain.”
10 Brooks v. Andolina, 826 F.2d 1266, 1269 (3d Cir. 1987).

12 In a few types of cases, “presumed” damages may be available. “When a plaintiff seeks 13 compensation for an injury that is likely to have occurred but difficult to establish ... presumed 14 damages may roughly approximate the harm that the plaintiff suffered and thereby compensate for 15 harms that may be impossible to measure.” Stachura, 477 U.S. at 310-11. However, only a 16 “narrow” range of claims will qualify for presumed damages. Spence v. Board of Educ. of 17 Christina School Dist., 806 F.2d 1198, 1200 (3d Cir. 1986) (noting that “[t]he situations alluded 18 to by the Memphis Court that would justify presumed damages [involved] defamation and the 19 deprivation of the right to vote”).

21 If warranted by the evidence, the court can instruct the jury to distinguish between damages
22 caused by legal conduct and damages caused by illegal conduct. Cf. Bennis v. Gable, 823 F.2d 23 723, 734 n.14 (3d Cir. 1987) (“Apportionment [of compensatory damages] is appropriate
24 whenever ‘a factual basis can be found for some rough practical apportionment, which limits a 25 defendant's liability to that part of the harm which that defendant's conduct has been cause in 26 fact.’”) (quoting Prosser & Keeton, The Law of Torts, § 52, at 345 (5th ed. 1984)); Eazor Express, 27 Inc. v. International Brotherhood of Teamsters, 520 F.2d 951, 967 (3d Cir.1975) (reviewing 28 judgment entered after bench trial in case under Labor Management Relations Act and discussing 29 apportionment of damages between legal and illegal conduct), overruled on other grounds by 30 Carbon Fuel Co. v. United Mine Workers of America, 444 U.S. 212, 215 (1979).

32 The court should instruct the jury on the categories of compensatory damages that it should 33 consider. Those categories will often parallel the categories of damages available under tort law.
34 “[O]ver the centuries the common law of torts has developed a set of rules to implement the 35 principle that a person should be compensated fairly for injuries caused by the violation of his 36 legal rights. These rules, defining the elements of damages and the prerequisites for their recovery, 37 provide the appropriate starting point for the inquiry under § 1983 as well.” Carey v. Phipus, 435
38 U.S. 247, 257-258 (1978).¹¹⁶ The Carey Court also noted, however, that “the rules governing

¹¹⁶ Compensatory damages in a Section 1983 case “may include not only out-of-pocket

4.8.1 Section 1983 –Compensatory Damages

1 compensation for injuries caused by the deprivation of constitutional rights should be tailored to 2 the interests protected by the particular right in question.” Id. at 259.

4 The Prison Litigation Reform Act (“PLRA”) provides that “[n]o Federal civil action may 5 be brought by a prisoner confined in a jail, prison, or other correctional facility, for mental or 6 emotional injury suffered while in custody without a prior showing of physical injury.” 42 U.S.C.
7 § 1997e(e). This provision “requir[es] a less-than-significant-but-more-than-de minimis physical 8 injury as a predicate to allegations of emotional injury.” Mitchell v. Horn, 318 F.3d 523, 536 (3d 9 Cir. 2003). However, this provision does not bar the award of nominal and punitive damages. See 10 Allah v. Al-Hafeez, 226 F.3d 247, 252 (3d Cir. 2000) (holding that “[n]either claims seeking 11 nominal damages to vindicate constitutional rights nor claims seeking punitive damages to deter 12 or punish egregious violations of constitutional rights are claims ‘for mental or emotional injury’”
13 within the meaning of Section 1997e(e)).¹¹⁷ At least one district court has interpreted Section 14 1997e(e) to preclude the award of damages for emotional injury absent a finding of physical injury.
15 See Tate v. Dragovich, 2003 WL 21978141, at *9 (E.D.Pa. 2003) (“Plaintiff was barred from 16 recovering compensatory damages for his alleged emotional and psychological injuries by § 17 803(d)(e) of the PLRA, which requires that proof of physical injury precede any consideration of 18 mental or emotional harm, 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(e) (2003), and the jury was instructed as such.”). In 19 a case within Section 1997e(e)’s ambit,¹¹⁸ the court should incorporate this consideration into the loss and other monetary harms, but also such injuries as ‘impairment of reputation ..., personal humiliation, and mental anguish and suffering.’” Memphis Community School Dist. v. Stachura, 477 U.S. 299, 307 (1986) (quoting Gertz v. Robert Welch, Inc., 418 U.S. 323, 350 (1974)); see also Coleman v. Kaye, 87 F.3d 1491, 1507 (3d Cir. 1996) (in sex discrimination case, holding that plaintiff could recover damages under Section 1983 for “personal anguish she suffered as a result of being passed over for promotion”); Chainey v. Street, 523 F.3d 200, 216 (3d Cir. 2008) (discussing proof of damages for emotional distress).
20 instructions.¹¹⁹

¹¹⁷ One court has held that Section 1997e’s reference to “mental or emotional injury” does not encompass physical pain. See Perez v. Jackson, 2000 WL 893445, at *2 (E.D.Pa. June 30, 2000) (“Physical pain wantonly inflicted in a manner which violates the Eighth Amendment is a sufficient ‘physical injury’ to permit recovery under § 1983. Plaintiff also has not pled a claim for emotional or mental injury.”).

¹¹⁸ “[T]he applicability of the personal injury requirement of 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(e) turns on the plaintiff’s status as a prisoner, not at the time of the incident, but when the lawsuit is filed.” Abdul-Akbar v. McKelvie, 239 F.3d 307, 314 (3d Cir. 2001) (en banc).

¹¹⁹ It is not entirely clear that Section 1997e(e) precludes an award of damages for

4.8.1 Section 1983 –Compensatory Damages

1 The Third Circuit has held that the district court has discretion to award prejudgment
2 interest in Section 1983 cases. See Savarese v. Agriss, 883 F.2d 1194, 1207 (3d Cir. 1989).
3 Accordingly, it appears that the question of prejudgment interest need not be submitted to the jury.
4 Compare Cordero v. De Jesus-Mendez, 922 F.2d 11, 13 (1st Cir. 1990) (“[I]n an action brought 5 under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, the issue of prejudgment interest is so closely allied with the issue of 6 damages that federal law dictates that the jury should decide whether to assess it.”).

8 There appears to be no uniform practice regarding the use of an instruction that warns the 9 jury against speculation on attorney fees and costs. In Collins v. Alco Parking Corp., 448 F.3d 10 652 (3d Cir. 2006), the district court gave the following instruction: “You are instructed that if 11 plaintiff wins on his claim, he may be entitled to an award of attorney fees and costs over and 12 above what you award as damages. It is my duty to decide whether to award attorney fees and 13 costs, and if so, how much. Therefore, attorney fees and costs should play no part in your 14 calculation of any damages.” Id. at 656-57. The Court of Appeals held that the plaintiff had not 15 properly objected to the instruction, and, reviewing for plain error, found none: “We need not and 16 do not decide now whether a district court commits error by informing a jury about the availability
17 of attorney fees in an ADEA case. Assuming arguendo that an error occurred, such error is not 18 plain, for two reasons.” Id. at 657. First, “it is not ‘obvious’ or ‘plain’ that an instruction directing 19 the jury not to consider attorney fees” is irrelevant or prejudicial; “it is at least arguable that a jury
20 tasked with computing damages might, absent information that the Court has discretion to award 21 attorney fees at a later stage, seek to compensate a sympathetic plaintiff for the expense of 22 litigation.” Id. Second, it is implausible “that the jury, in order to eliminate the chance that Collins
23 might be awarded attorney fees, took the disproportionate step of returning a verdict against him
24 even though it believed he was the victim of age discrimination, notwithstanding the District 25 Court’s clear instructions to the contrary.” Id.; see also id. at 658 (distinguishing Fisher v. City of 26 Memphis, 234 F.3d 312, 319 (6th Cir. 2000), and Brooks v. Cook, 938 F.2d 1048, 1051 (9th Cir.
27 1991)).

emotional injury absent a jury finding of physical injury; rather, the statute focuses upon the pretrial stage, by precluding the prisoner from bringing an action seeking damages for emotional injury absent a prior showing of physical injury. A narrow reading of the statute’s language arguably accords with the statutory purpose of decreasing the number of inmate suits and enabling the pretrial dismissal of such suits where only emotional injury is alleged: Under this view, if a plaintiff has survived summary judgment by pointing to evidence that would enable a reasonable jury to find physical injury, it would not offend the statute’s purpose to permit the jury to award damages for emotional distress even if the jury did not find physical injury.
However, because it is far from clear that this view will ultimately prevail, the safer course may be to incorporate the physical injury requirement into the jury instructions.

1 4.8.2 Section 1983 – Damages –
2 Nominal Damages

6 If you return a verdict for [plaintiff], but [plaintiff] has failed to prove compensatory 7 damages, then you must award nominal damages of $ 1.00.

9 A person whose federal rights were violated is entitled to a recognition of that violation, 10 even if [he/she] suffered no actual injury. Nominal damages (of $1.00) are designed to 11 acknowledge the deprivation of a federal right, even where no actual injury occurred.

13 However, if you find actual injury, you must award compensatory damages (as I instructed 14 you), rather than nominal damages.

17 Comment

18
19 The Supreme Court has explained that “[b]y making the deprivation of . . . rights actionable 20 for nominal damages without proof of actual injury, the law recognizes the importance to 21 organized society that those rights be scrupulously observed.” Carey v. Phipus, 435 U.S. 247, 266
22 (1978). Carey involved a procedural due process claim, but the Court indicated that the rationale
23 for nominal damages extended to other types of Section 1983 claims as well: The Court observed, 24 with apparent approval, that “[a] number of lower federal courts have approved the award of 25 nominal damages under § 1983 where deprivations of constitutional rights are not shown to have 26 caused actual injury.” See id. n.24 (citing cases involving Section 1983 claims for various 27 constitutional violations); see also Memphis Community School Dist. v. Stachura, 477 U.S. 299, 28 308 n.11 (1986) (explaining that “nominal damages . . . are the appropriate means of ‘vindicating’
29 rights whose deprivation has not caused actual, provable injury”); Allah v. Al-Hafeez, 226 F.3d 30 247, 252 (3d Cir. 2000) (noting “the Supreme Court’s clear directive that nominal damages are 31 available for the vindication of a constitutional right absent any proof of actual injury”); Atkinson
32 v. Taylor, 316 F.3d 257, 265 n.6 (3d Cir. 2003) (“[E]ven if appellee is unable to establish a right 33 to compensatory damages, he may be entitled to nominal damages.”); B.S. v. Somerset County,

37 An instruction on nominal damages is proper when the plaintiff has failed to present 38 evidence of actual injury. However, when the plaintiff has presented evidence of actual injury and

4.8.2 Section 1983 – Nominal Damages

1 that evidence is undisputed,¹²⁰ it is error to instruct the jury on nominal damages, at least if the 2 nominal damages instruction is emphasized to the exclusion of appropriate instructions on 3 compensatory damages.¹²¹ In Pryer v. C.O. 3 Slavic, the district court granted a new trial, based 4 partly on the ground that because the plaintiff had presented “undisputed proof of actual injury, an 5 instruction on nominal damages was inappropriate.” Pryer v. C.O. 3 Slavic, 251 F.3d 448, 452
6 (3d Cir. 2001). In upholding the grant of a new trial, the Court of Appeals noted that “nominal
7 damages may only be awarded in the absence of proof of actual injury.” See id. at 453. The court 8 observed that the district court had “recognized that he had erroneously instructed the jury on 9 nominal damages and failed to inform it of the availability of compensatory damages for pain and 10 suffering.” Id. Accordingly, the court held that “[t]he court's error in failing to instruct as to the 11 availability of damages for such intangible harms, coupled with its emphasis on nominal damages, 12 rendered the totality of the instructions confusing and misleading.” Id. at 454.

¹²¹ Cf. Brooks v. Andolina, 826 F.2d 1266, 1269-70 (3d Cir. 1987) (in case tried without a jury, holding that it was error to award only nominal damages because the plaintiff “demonstrated that he suffered actual injury” by testifying “that while in punitive segregation he lost his regular visiting and phone call privileges, his rights to recreation and to use the law library, and his wages from his job”).

4 Model ¹²²

6 In addition to compensatory or nominal damages, you may consider awarding [plaintiff]
7 punitive damages. A jury may award punitive damages to punish a defendant, or to deter the 8 defendant and others like the defendant from committing such conduct in the future. [Where 9 appropriate, the jury may award punitive damages even if the plaintiff suffered no actual injury
10 and so receives nominal rather than compensatory damages.]

12 You may only award punitive damages if you find that [defendant] [a particular defendant]
13 acted maliciously or wantonly in violating [plaintiff’s] federally protected rights. [In this case
14 there are multiple defendants. You must make a separate determination whether each defendant 15 acted maliciously or wantonly.]

17 ● A violation is malicious if it was prompted by ill will or spite towards the plaintiff. A 18 defendant is malicious when [he/she] consciously desires to violate federal rights of which 19 [he/she] is aware, or when [he/she] consciously desires to injure the plaintiff in a manner 20 [he/she] knows to be unlawful. A conscious desire to perform the physical acts that caused 21 plaintiff’s injury, or to fail to undertake certain acts, does not by itself establish that a 22 defendant had a conscious desire to violate rights or injure plaintiff unlawfully.
23
24 ● A violation is wanton if the person committing the violation recklessly or callously 25 disregarded the plaintiff’s rights.
26

27 If you find that it is more likely than not¹²³ that [defendant] [a particular defendant] acted

¹²² See Comment for alternative language tailored to Eighth Amendment excessive force claims.

¹²³ The Court of Appeals has not addressed the question of the appropriate standard of proof for punitive damages with respect to Section 1983 claims, but at least one district court in the Third Circuit has applied the preponderance standard. See Hopkins v. City of Wilmington, 615 F. Supp. 1455, 1465 (D. Del. 1985); cf., e.g., White v. Burlington Northern & Santa Fe R. Co., 364 F.3d 789, 805 (6th Cir. 2004) (en banc) (“[T]he appropriate burden of proof on a claim for punitive damages under Title VII is a preponderance of the evidence . . .”), aff’d, 126 S. Ct. 2405 (2006); compare Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Haslip, 499 U.S. 1, 23 n.11 (1991) (noting that “[t]here is much to be said in favor of a State’s requiring . . . a standard of ‘clear and

4.8.3 Section 1983 – Punitive Damages

1 maliciously or wantonly in violating [plaintiff’s] federal rights, then you may award punitive
2 damages [against that defendant].¹²⁴ However, an award of punitive damages is discretionary; that 3 is, if you find that the legal requirements for punitive damages are satisfied, then you may decide 4 to award punitive damages, or you may decide not to award them. I will now discuss some 5 considerations that should guide your exercise of this discretion. But remember that you cannot 6 award punitive damages unless you have found that [defendant] [the defendant in question] acted 7 maliciously or wantonly in violating [plaintiff’s] federal rights.

9 If you have found that [defendant] [the defendant in question] acted maliciously or 10 wantonly in violating [plaintiff’s] federal rights, then you should consider the purposes of punitive
11 damages. The purposes of punitive damages are to punish a defendant for a malicious or wanton
12 violation of the plaintiff’s federal rights, or to deter the defendant and others like the defendant
13 from doing similar things in the future, or both. Thus, you may consider whether to award punitive
14 damages to punish [defendant]. You should also consider whether actual damages standing alone 15 are sufficient to deter or prevent [defendant] from again performing any wrongful acts [he/she] 16 may have performed. Finally, you should consider whether an award of punitive damages in this 17 case is likely to deter other persons from performing wrongful acts similar to those [defendant] 18 may have committed.

20 If you decide to award punitive damages, then you should also consider the purposes of 21 punitive damages in deciding the amount of punitive damages to award. That is, in deciding the 22 amount of punitive damages, you should consider the degree to which [defendant] should be 23 punished for [his/her] wrongful conduct toward [plaintiff], and the degree to which an award of 24 one sum or another will deter [defendant] or others from committing similar wrongful acts in the 25 future.
26

27 In considering the purposes of punishment and deterrence, you should consider the nature
28 of the defendant’s action. For example, you are entitled to consider [include any of the following 29 that are warranted by the evidence] [whether a defendant’s act was violent or non-violent; whether 30 the defendant’s act posed a risk to health or safety; whether the defendant acted in a deliberately 31 deceptive manner; and whether the defendant engaged in repeated misconduct, or a single act.]

convincing evidence’ or, even, ‘beyond a reasonable doubt’” for punitive damages, but holding that “the lesser standard prevailing in Alabama – ‘reasonably satisfied from the evidence’ – when buttressed . . . by [other] procedural and substantive protections . . . is constitutionally sufficient”).

¹²⁴ Use “a particular defendant” and “against that defendant” in cases involving multiple defendants.

4.8.3 Section 1983 – Punitive Damages

1 You should also consider the amount of harm actually caused by the defendant’s act, [as well as 2 the harm the defendant’s act could have caused]¹²⁵ and the harm that could result if such acts are 3 not deterred in the future.

5 [Bear in mind that when considering whether to use punitive damages to punish 6 [defendant], you should only punish [defendant] for harming [plaintiff], and not for harming
7 people other than [plaintiff]. As I have mentioned, in considering whether to punish [defendant], 8 you should consider the nature of [defendant]’s conduct – in other words, how blameworthy that 9 conduct was. In some cases, evidence that a defendant’s conduct harmed other people in addition 10 to the plaintiff can help to show that the defendant’s conduct posed a substantial risk of harm to 11 the general public, and so was particularly blameworthy. But if you consider evidence of harm 12 [defendant] caused to people other than [plaintiff], you must make sure to use that evidence only 13 to help you decide how blameworthy the defendant’s conduct toward [plaintiff] was. Do not 14 punish [defendant] for harming people other than [plaintiff].]¹²⁶

16 [The extent to which a particular amount of money will adequately punish a defendant, and 17 the extent to which a particular amount will adequately deter or prevent future misconduct, may 18 depend upon the defendant’s financial resources. Therefore, if you find that punitive damages 19 should be awarded against [defendant], you may consider the financial resources of [defendant] in 20 fixing the amount of such damages.]

9 The Supreme Court has imposed some due process limits on both the size of punitive 10 damages awards and the process by which those awards are determined and reviewed.¹²⁹ In 11 performing the substantive due process review of the size of punitive awards, a court must consider 12 three factors: “the degree of reprehensibility of” the defendant’s conduct; “the disparity between 13 the harm or potential harm suffered by” the plaintiff and the punitive award; and the difference
14 between the punitive award “and the civil penalties authorized or imposed in comparable cases.”
15 BMW of North America, Inc. v. Gore, 517 U.S. 559, 575 (1996). The Supreme Court’s due process
16 precedents have a dual relevance in Section 1983 cases. First, those precedents presumably govern
17 a court’s review of punitive damages awards in Section 1983 cases; there is no reason to think that 18 a different constitutional standard applies to Section 1983 cases¹³⁰ (though the Gore factors may

¹³⁰ See Exxon Shipping Co. v. Baker, 128 S. Ct. 2605, 2626 (2008) (“The Court’s response to outlier punitive damages awards has thus far been confined by [sic] claims at the constitutional level, and our cases have announced due process standards that every award must pass.”) (citing State Farm and Gore).

4.8.3 Section 1983 – Punitive Damages

1 well apply differently in such cases than they do in cases under state tort law). Second, the 2 concerns elaborated by the Court in the due process cases may also provide some guidance
3 concerning the Court’s likely views on the substantive standards that should guide juries in Section
4 1983 cases. Though the Court has not held that juries hearing state-law tort claims must be 5 instructed to consider the Gore factors, it is possible that the Court might in the future approve the 6 use of analogous considerations in instructing juries in Section 1983 cases.

8 The Court’s due process decisions, of course, concern the outer limits placed on punitive 9 awards by the Constitution. It is also possible that the Court may in future cases develop 10 subconstitutional principles of federal law that further constrain punitive awards in Section 1983
11 cases. An example of the application of such principles in a different area of substantive federal 12 law is provided by Exxon Shipping Co. v. Baker, 128 S. Ct. 2605 (2008). In Exxon, the plaintiffs 13 sought compensatory and punitive damages from Exxon Mobil Corp. and its subsidiary arising 14 from the Exxon Valdez oil spill. The jury awarded $ 5 billion in punitive damages against Exxon.
15 See id. at 2614. The court of appeals remitted the punitive award to $ 2.5 billion. See id. A 16 divided Supreme Court ordered a further reduction of the punitive award to $ 507.5 million on the 17 ground that under the circumstances the appropriate ratio of punitives to compensatories was 1:1.
18 See id. at 2634. The Exxon Court applied this ratio as a matter of federal “maritime common law,” 19 see id. at 2626, but the Court’s concern with the predictability and consistency of punitive awards, 20 see id. at 2627, may apply to Section 1983 cases as well.

22 However, the particular ratio chosen by the Exxon Court is unlikely to constrain all such 23 awards in Section 1983 cases. The Exxon Court stressed that based on the jury’s findings the 24 conduct in the Exxon case involved “no earmarks of exceptional blameworthiness” such as 25 “intentional or malicious conduct” or “behavior driven primarily by desire for gain,” and that the 26 case was not one in which the compensatory damage award was small or in which the defendant’s
27 conduct was unlikely to be detected. Id. at 2633. The Exxon Court likewise noted that some areas
28 of law were distinguishable from the Exxon case in that those areas implicated a regulatory goal 29 of “induc[ing] private litigation to supplement official enforcement that might fall short if 30 unaided.” See id. at 2622. These observations suggest why the Exxon Court’s 1:1 ratio may well 31 not translate to the context of a Section 1983 claim. Moreover, the Exxon Court did not state that 32 a ratio such as the one it applied in the Exxon case should be included in jury instructions rather 33 than simply being applied by the judge during review of the jury award.¹³¹ However, given the ¹³¹ Admittedly, the Court explained that its use of a ratio was preferable to setting a numerical cap on punitive awards because the ratio “leave[s] the effects of inflation to the jury or judge who assesses the value of actual loss, by pegging punitive to compensatory damages using a ratio or maximum multiple.” Exxon, 128 S. Ct. at 2629. However, this statement need not be read to mean that the jury should be instructed to apply the relevant ratio; it can as easily be taken as an observation that by “pegging punitive to compensatory damages” the ratio will

4.8.3 Section 1983 – Punitive Damages

1 possibility that courts may in the future apply analogous principles in the Section 1983 context,
2 counsel may wish to seek the submission to the jury of interrogatories that elicit the jury’s view 3 on relevant factual matters such as whether the conduct qualifying for the punitive award was 4 merely reckless or whether it involved some greater degree of culpability.

6 The Court’s due process precedents indicate a concern that vague jury instructions may 7 increase the risk of arbitrary punitive damages awards. See State Farm Mutual Automobile Ins.
8 Co. v. Campbell, 538 U.S. 408, 418 (2003) (“Vague instructions, or those that merely inform the 9 jury to avoid ‘passion or prejudice,’ . . . do little to aid the decisionmaker in its task of assigning 10 appropriate weight to evidence that is relevant and evidence that is tangential or only 11 inflammatory”). However, as noted above, the Court has not held that due process requires jury
12 instructions to reflect Gore’s three-factor approach.¹³² To the contrary, the Court has upheld 13 against a due process challenge an award rendered by a jury that had received instructions that 14 were much less specific. See Pacific Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Haslip, 499 U.S. 1, 6 n.1 (1991)
15 (quoting jury instruction); id. at 43 (O’Connor, J., dissenting) (arguing that “the trial court’s
16 instructions in this case provided no meaningful standards to guide the jury’s decision to impose
17 punitive damages or to fix the amount”). It is not clear that it would be either feasible or advisable 18 to import all three Gore factors into jury instructions on punitive damages in Section 1983 cases.
19

20 The first factor – the reprehensibility of the defendant’s conduct – may appropriately be 21 included in the instruction. The model instruction lists that consideration among the factors that 22 the jury may consider in determining whether to award punitive damages and in determining the 23 size of such damages. In assessing reprehensibility, a jury can take into account, for instance,
24 whether an offense was violent or nonviolent; whether the offense posed a risk to health or safety; 25 or whether a defendant was deceptive. See Gore, 517 U.S. at 576.¹³³ The jury can also take into incorporate the jury’s stated view on the appropriate amount of compensatory damages.

¹³² To date, one of the few specific requirements imposed by the Court is that “[a] jury must be instructed . . . that it may not use evidence of out of state conduct to punish a defendant for action that was lawful in the jurisdiction where it occurred.” State Farm, 538 U.S. at 422. This requirement stems from the concern that a state should not impose punitive damages based on a defendant’s legal out-of-state conduct; that concern, of course, does not arise in the context of Section 1983 suits.

The Court’s decision in Philip Morris, 127 S. Ct. 1057 (2007) – which addresses the jury’s consideration of harm to third parties – is discussed below.

¹³³ See also CGB Occupational Therapy, Inc. v. RHA Health Services, Inc., 499 F.3d 184, 190 (3d Cir. 2007) (“In evaluating the degree of Sunrise’s reprehensibility in this case, we must consider whether: ‘[1] the harm caused was physical as opposed to economic; [2] the

4.8.3 Section 1983 – Punitive Damages

1 account that “repeated misconduct is more reprehensible than an individual instance of 2 malfeasance.” Id. at 577.¹³⁴ Where supported by the facts, the jury may also consider a plaintiff’s
3 improper conduct as mitigating the need for a high punitive damages award. Brand Marketing
4 Group v. Intertek Testing, 801 F.3d 347, 363 (3d Cir. 2015).

6 In considering reprehensibility, the jury can also be instructed to consider the harm actually 7 caused by the defendant’s act, as well as the harm the defendant’s act could have caused and the 8 harm that could result if such acts are not deterred in the future.¹³⁵ However, the Court’s decision
9 in Philip Morris USA v. Williams, 127 S.Ct. 1057 (2007), underscores the need for caution with 10 respect to such an instruction in a case where the jury might consider harm to people other than 11 the plaintiff. If a jury bases a punitive damages award “in part upon its desire to punish the 12 defendant for harming persons who are not before the court (e.g., victims whom the parties do not 13 represent),” that award “amount[s] to a taking of ‘property’ from the defendant without due 14 process.” Philip Morris, 127 S. Ct. at 1060. The Court reasoned that permitting a jury to punish 15 the defendant for harm caused to non-plaintiffs would deprive the defendant of the chance to 16 defend itself and would invite standardless speculation by the jury:

tortious conduct evinced an indifference to or reckless disregard of the health or safety of others;
[3] the target of the conduct had financial vulnerability; [4] the conduct involved repeated actions or was an isolated incident; and [5] the harm was the result of intentional malice, trickery, or deceit, or mere accident.”) (quoting Campbell, 538 U.S. at 419); Cortez v. Trans Union, LLC, 617 F.3d 688, 718 n.37 (3d Cir. 2010) (in Fair Credit Reporting Act case, noting in dictum that there was “nothing wrong with a jury focusing on a ‘defendant's seeming insensitivity’ in deciding how much to award as punitive damages”).

¹³⁴ In considering whether the defendant was a recidivist malefactor, the jury should consider only misconduct similar to that directed against the plaintiff. See State Farm, 538 U.S. at 424 (“[B]ecause the Campbells have shown no conduct by State Farm similar to that which harmed them, the conduct that harmed them is the only conduct relevant to the reprehensibility analysis.”); Brand Marketing Group v. Intertek Testing, 801 F.3d 347, 365 (3d Cir. 2015) (holding State Farm “does not prohibit the consideration of potential public harm in addition to the plaintiff’s injury. It prohibits only the consideration of conduct that is unrelated to the plaintiff’s case.”).

¹³⁵ See TXO Production Corp. v. Alliance Resources Corp., 509 U.S. 443, 460 (1993) (Stevens, J., joined by Rehnquist, C.J., and Blackmun, J.) (“It is appropriate to consider the magnitude of the potential harm that the defendant's conduct would have caused to its intended victim if the wrongful plan had succeeded, as well as the possible harm to other victims that might have resulted if similar future behavior were not deterred.”) (emphasis in original).

4.8.3 Section 1983 – Punitive Damages

2 [A] defendant threatened with punishment for injuring a nonparty victim has no
3 opportunity to defend against the charge, by showing, for example in a case such 4 as this, that the other victim was not entitled to damages because he or she knew 5 that smoking was dangerous or did not rely upon the defendant's statements to the 6 contrary. For another [thing], to permit punishment for injuring a nonparty victim
7 would add a near standardless dimension to the punitive damages equation. How 8 many such victims are there? How seriously were they injured? Under what 9 circumstances did injury occur? The trial will not likely answer such questions as 10 to nonparty victims. The jury will be left to speculate. And the fundamental due 11 process concerns to which our punitive damages cases refer – risks of arbitrariness, 12 uncertainty and lack of notice – will be magnified.

14 Philip Morris, 127 S. Ct. at 1063.
15

16 However, the Philip Morris Court conceded that “harm to other victims ... is relevant to a 17 different part of the punitive damages constitutional equation, namely, reprehensibility”: In other 18 words, “[e]vidence of actual harm to nonparties can help to show that the conduct that harmed the 19 plaintiff also posed a substantial risk of harm to the general public, and so was particularly 20 reprehensible – although counsel may argue in a particular case that conduct resulting in no harm
21 to others nonetheless posed a grave risk to the public, or the converse.” Id. at 1064. But the Court 22 stressed that “a jury may not go further than this and use a punitive damages verdict to punish a 23 defendant directly on account of harms it is alleged to have visited on nonparties.” Id. States¹³⁶ 24 must ensure “that juries are not asking the wrong question, i.e., seeking, not simply to determine 25 reprehensibility, but also to punish for harm caused strangers.” Id. “[W]here the risk of that 26 misunderstanding is a significant one – because, for instance, of the sort of evidence that was 27 introduced at trial or the kinds of argument the plaintiff made to the jury – a court, upon request, 28 must protect against that risk.” Id. at 1065.

30 Accordingly, where evidence or counsel’s argument to the jury indicates that the 31 defendant’s conduct harmed people other than the plaintiff, Philip Morris requires the court – upon 32 request – to ensure that the jury is not confused as to the use it can make of this information in 33 assessing punitive damages. The Philip Morris Court did not specify how the trial court should 34 prevent jury confusion on this issue. The penultimate paragraph in Instruction 4.8.3 attempts to ¹³⁶ Philip Morris concerned a state-law claim litigated in state court and thus the Court focused on the limits imposed by the Fourteenth Amendment’s Due Process Clause on state governments. Presumably, the Fifth Amendment’s Due Process Clause imposes a similar constraint with respect to federal claims litigated in federal court.

4.8.3 Section 1983 – Punitive Damages

1 explain the distinction between permissible and impermissible uses of information relating to harm
2 to third parties. This paragraph is bracketed to indicate that it should be given only when 3 necessitated by the evidence or argument presented to the jury.

5 The model does not state that reprehensibility is a prerequisite to the award of punitive
6 damages,¹³⁷ because precedent in civil rights cases indicates that the jury can award punitive 7 damages if it finds the defendant maliciously or wantonly violated the plaintiff’s rights, without 8 separately finding that the defendant’s conduct was egregious. In Kolstad, the Supreme Court 9 interpreted a statutory requirement that the jury must find the defendant acted “with malice or with 10 reckless indifference to the federally protected rights of an aggrieved individual” in order to award
11 punitive damages under Title VII. See Kolstad, 527 U.S. at 534 (quoting 42 U.S.C. § 1981a(b)(1)).
12 Reasoning that “[t]he terms ‘malice’ and ‘reckless’ ultimately focus on the actor’s state of mind,” 13 the Court rejected the view “that eligibility for punitive damages can only be described in terms of 14 an employer’s ‘egregious’ misconduct.” Kolstad, 527 U.S. at 534-35. Since the Kolstad Court
15 drew on the Smith v. Wade standard in delineating the punitive damages standard under Title VII, 16 Kolstad’s reasoning seems equally applicable to the standard for punitive damages under Section
17 1983. The Third Circuit has applied Kolstad’s definition of recklessness to a Section 1983 case, 18 albeit in a non-precedential opinion. See Whittaker v. Fayette County, 65 Fed. Appx. 387, 393 (3d 19 Cir. April 9, 2003) (non-precedential opinion); see also Schall v. Vazquez, 322 F. Supp. 2d 594, 20 602 (E.D. Pa. 2004) (in a Section 1983 case, applying Kolstad’s holding “that a defendant’s state 21 of mind and not the egregious conduct is determinative in awarding punitive damages”).

23 It is far less clear that the jury should be instructed to consider the second Gore factor (the 24 ratio of actual to punitive damages).¹³⁸ Though the Court has “decline[d] to impose a bright line
25 ratio which a punitive damages award cannot exceed,” it has stated that “in practice, few awards
26 exceeding a single digit ratio between punitive and compensatory damages, to a significant degree, 27 will satisfy due process.” State Farm, 538 U.S. at 425. However, the analysis is complicated by 28 the possibility that the permissible ratio will vary inversely to the size of the compensatory
29 damages award.¹³⁹ See id. (stating that “ratios greater than those we have previously upheld may

¹³⁷ Some sets of model instructions include a reference to “extraordinary misconduct” or equivalent terms. See Eighth Circuit (Civil) Instruction 4.53 (“extraordinary misconduct”); Sand Instruction 87-92 (“extreme or outrageous conduct”). One reason for the inclusion of this language may be that the instruction approved in Smith v. Wade referred to “extraordinary misconduct.” Smith, 461 U.S. at 33.

¹³⁸ It is also unclear how a court would instruct a jury on the third Gore factor in the context of a Section 1983 suit; the model instruction omits any reference to this factor.

¹³⁹ Indeed, an inflexible ratio would conflict with the well-established principle that

4.8.3 Section 1983 – Punitive Damages

1 comport with due process” where an especially reprehensible act causes only small damages, and 2 that conversely, “[w]hen compensatory damages are substantial, then a lesser ratio, perhaps only
3 equal to compensatory damages, can reach the outermost limit of the due process guarantee”).¹⁴⁰
4 Instructing a jury that its punitive damages award must not exceed some multiple of its 5 compensatory damages award might have undesirable effects. Though such a directive might 6 constrain some punitive damages awards, in other cases (where a jury would otherwise be inclined 7 to award only a small amount of punitive damages) calling the jury’s attention to a multiple of the 8 compensatory award might anchor the jury’s deliberations at a higher figure. In addition, it is 9 possible that a jury that wished to award a particular total sum to a plaintiff might redistribute its 10 award between compensatory and punitive damages in order to comply with the stated ratio.

12 Due to the complexities and potential downsides of a proportionality instruction, the 13 Committee has not included proportionality language in the model instruction. However, in a case 14 in which the compensatory damages will be substantial (such as a wrongful death case), it may be 15 useful to instruct the jury to consider the relationship between the amount of any punitive award compensatory damages are not a prerequisite for the imposition of punitive damages in civil rights cases. See Allah v. Al-Hafeez, 226 F.3d 247, 251 (3d Cir. 2000) (“Punitive damages may . . . be awarded based solely on a constitutional violation, provided the proper showing is made.”); cf. Alexander v. Riga, 208 F.3d 419, 430 (3d Cir. 2000) (in suit under Fair Housing Act and Civil Rights Act of 1866, noting that “beyond a doubt, punitive damages can be awarded in a civil rights case where a jury finds a constitutional violation, even when the jury has not awarded compensatory or nominal damages.”); see also Williams v. Kaufman County, 352 F.3d 994, 1016 (5th Cir. 2003) (“Because actions seeking vindication of constitutional rights are more likely to result only in nominal damages, strict proportionality would defeat the ability to award punitive damages at all.”).

The Court of Appeals has also suggested that the denominator used by a reviewing court might sometimes be larger than the amount of compensatory damages actually awarded by the jury. See CGB Occupational, 499 F.3d at 192 n.4 (citing with apparent approval a case in which the court “measur[ed] $150,000 punitive damages award against $135,000 award in attorney fees and costs, rather than against $2,000 compensatory award” and a case in which the court “consider[ed] expert testimony of potential loss to plaintiffs in the amount of $769,895, in addition to compensatory damages awarded for past harm, as part of ratio's denominator”).

¹⁴⁰ See also Exxon Shipping Co. v. Baker, 128 S. Ct. 2605, 2622 (2008) (noting that “heavier punitive awards have been thought to be justifiable . . . when the value of injury and the corresponding compensatory award are small (providing low incentives to sue)”).

4.8.3 Section 1983 – Punitive Damages

1 and the amount of harm the defendant caused to the plaintiff.¹⁴¹ In such a case, instructing the jury
2 to consider that relationship would not unduly confine a punitive award but could help to ensure 3 that any such award is not unconstitutionally excessive.

5 The Court’s due process cases also raise some question about the implications of evidence
6 concerning a defendant’s financial resources. The Court has stated that such evidence will not 7 loosen the limits imposed by due process on the size of a punitive award. See State Farm, 538
8 U.S. at 427 (“The wealth of a defendant cannot justify an otherwise unconstitutional punitive 9 damages award.”).¹⁴² Elsewhere, the Court has noted its concern that evidence of wealth could 10 trigger jury bias: “Jury instructions typically leave the jury with wide discretion in choosing 11 amounts, and the presentation of evidence of a defendant’s net worth creates the potential that 12 juries will use their verdicts to express biases against big businesses, particularly those without 13 strong local presences.” Honda Motor Co., Ltd. v. Oberg, 512 U.S. 415, 432 (1994). Although

¹⁴² In the same discussion, however, the Court quoted with apparent approval Justice Breyer’s concurrence in Gore: “[Wealth] provides an open ended basis for inflating awards when the defendant is wealthy That does not make its use unlawful or inappropriate; it simply means that this factor cannot make up for the failure of other factors, such as ‘reprehensibility,’ to constrain significantly an award that purports to punish a defendant’s conduct.” State Farm, 538 U.S. at 427-28 (quoting Gore, 517 U.S. at 591 (Breyer, J., joined by O’Connor & Souter, JJ., concurring)). Although the State Farm Court’s quotation of this passage suggests the Court did not consider wealth an impermissible factor in the award of punitive damages, Justice Ginsburg posited that the Court’s reasoning might “unsettle” that principle. See State Farm, 538 U.S. at 438 n.2 (Ginsburg, J., dissenting).

The Court of Appeals has considered the defendant’s wealth as a factor relevant to its due process analysis; the court noted that a rich defendant may be more difficult to deter and that in some cases a rich defendant may engage in litigation misconduct in order to wear down an impecunious plaintiff. See CGB Occupational, 499 F.3d at 194 (“What sets this case apart and makes it, we hope, truly unusual is the repeated use of procedural devices to grind an opponent down, without regard for whether those devices advanced any legitimate interest.”). The court suggested, however, that a jury might have more difficulty than judges would in assessing litigation misconduct and its possible relevance to a punitive damages analysis. See id. at 194 n. 7.

4.8.3 Section 1983 – Punitive Damages

1 those concerns may be salient in products liability cases brought against wealthy corporations, in 2 Section 1983 cases, evidence of an individual defendant’s financial resources may be more likely
3 to constrain than to inflate a punitive damages award. However, the possibility that a government 4 employer might indemnify an individual defendant complicates the analysis.

6 “[E]vidence of a tortfeasor's wealth is traditionally admissible as a measure of the amount
7 of punitive damages that should be awarded.” Fact Concerts, 453 U.S. at 270.¹⁴³ If an individual
8 defendant will not be indemnified for an award of punitive damages, it seems clear that evidence 9 of the defendant’s financial resources is relevant and admissible on the question of punitive
10 damages. See Fact Concerts, 453 U.S. at 269 (“By allowing juries and courts to assess punitive 11 damages in appropriate circumstances against the offending official, based on his personal 12 financial resources, [Section 1983] directly advances the public's interest in preventing repeated 13 constitutional deprivations.”).

15 If the individual defendant will be indemnified, however, the relevance of the individual 16 defendant’s limited financial resources becomes more complex. Arguably, there may be an even 17 more pressing need to ensure that jury awards are not inflated. In a partial dissent in Keenan v.
18 City of Philadelphia, 983 F.2d 459 (3d Cir. 1992), Judge Higginbotham argued that when an 19 individual defendant will be indemnified by his or her government employer, the plaintiff should 20 be required to submit evidence of the individual defendant’s net worth in order to obtain punitive 21 damages. See id. at 484 (Higginbotham, J., dissenting in part). Judge Higginbotham asserted that 22 without such evidence, a jury might be too inclined to award large punitive damages, to the 23 detriment of innocent taxpayers. See id. at 477. Judge Higginbotham’s view, however, has not 24 become circuit precedent. An earlier Third Circuit panel had stated that “evidence of [the 25 defendant’s] financial status” is not “a prerequisite to the imposition of punitive damages.” Bennis
26 v. Gable, 823 F.2d 723, 734 n.14 (3d Cir. 1987). Though Judge Higginbotham rejected Bennis’s
27 statement as “dicta,” Keenan, 983 F.2d at 482 (Higginbotham, J., dissenting in part), Judge Becker
28 disagreed, see id. at 472 n.12 (footnote by Becker, J.) (describing Bennis as “circuit precedent”), 29 and a later district court opinion has taken the view that Judge Higginbotham’s approach is not 30 binding, see Garner v. Meoli, 19 F. Supp. 2d 378, 392 (E.D.Pa. 1998) (rejecting “defendants 31 argument, based on Judge Higginbotham's dissent in Keenan . . . , that a prerequisite to the 32 awarding of punitive damages is evidence of defendants' net worth and that the burden for 33 producing such evidence must be carried by plaintiffs”). Thus, it appears that under current Third
34 Circuit law the plaintiff need not submit evidence of the defendant’s net worth in order to obtain ¹⁴³ See Cortez v. Trans Union, LLC, 617 F.3d 688, 718 n.37 (3d Cir. 2010) (in a Fair Credit Reporting Act case, stating in dictum that “[a] jury can consider the relative wealth of a defendant in deciding what amount is sufficient to inflict the intended punishment”).

4.8.3 Section 1983 – Punitive Damages

1 punitive damages in a Section 1983 case.¹⁴⁴ Accordingly, the last paragraph of the model is 2 bracketed because it should be omitted in cases where no evidence is presented concerning the 3 defendant’s finances.

5 The definition of “malicious” in Instruction 4.8.3 (with respect to punitive damages) differs 6 from that provided in Instruction 4.10 (with respect to Eighth Amendment excessive force claims).
7 If the jury finds that the defendant acted “maliciously and sadistically, for the purpose of causing 8 harm” (such that the defendant violated the Eighth Amendment by employing excessive force), 9 that finding should also establish that the defendant “acted maliciously or wantonly in violating 10 the plaintiff’s federal rights,” so that the jury has discretion to award punitive damages. Thus, in 11 an Eighth Amendment excessive force case involving only one claim and one defendant, the 12 Committee suggests that the court substitute the following for the first three paragraphs of 13 Instruction 4.8.3:

15 If you have found that [defendant] violated the Eighth Amendment by using force 16 against [plaintiff] maliciously and sadistically, for the purpose of causing harm, 17 then you may consider awarding punitive damages in addition to nominal or 18 compensatory damages. A jury may award punitive damages to punish a defendant, 19 or to deter the defendant and others like [him/her] from committing such conduct 20 in the future. Where appropriate, the jury may award punitive damages even if the 21 plaintiff suffered no actual injury. However, bear in mind that an award of punitive 22 damages is discretionary; that is, you may decide to award punitive damages, or 23 you may decide not to award them.

25 However, in Eighth Amendment excessive force cases that also involve other types of claims (or 26 that involve claims against other defendants, such as for failure to intervene), the court should not 27 omit the first three paragraphs of Instruction 4.8.3. Rather, the court should modify the first bullet 28 point in the second paragraph, so that it begins: “● For purposes of considering punitive damages, 29 a violation is malicious if”

¹⁴⁴ One commentator has argued that if an indemnified defendant submits evidence of limited personal means, the plaintiff should be permitted to submit evidence that the defendant will be indemnified. See Martin A. Schwartz, Should Juries Be Informed that Municipality Will Indemnify Officer's § 1983 Liability for Constitutional Wrongdoing?, 86 IOWA L. REV. 1209, 1247-48 (2001) (“If a defendant introduces evidence of personal financial circumstances in order to persuade the jury to award low punitive damages, when in fact the defendant's punitive damages will be indemnified, failure to inform the jury about indemnification seriously misleads the jury.”). The Third Circuit has not addressed this question.

1 4.9 Section 1983 –
2 Excessive Force (Including Some Types of Deadly Force) –
3 Stop, Arrest, or other “Seizure”

7 The Fourth Amendment to the United States Constitution protects persons from being
8 subjected to excessive force while being [arrested] [stopped by police]. In other words, a law
9 enforcement official may only use the amount of force necessary under the circumstances to [make 10 the arrest] [conduct the stop]. Every person has the constitutional right not to be subjected to 11 excessive force while being [arrested] [stopped by police], even if the [arrest] [stop] is otherwise 12 proper.

14 In this case, [plaintiff] claims that [defendant] used excessive force when [he/she] 15 [arrested] [stopped] [plaintiff]. In order to establish that [defendant] used excessive force, 16 [plaintiff] must prove both of the following by a preponderance of the evidence:
17

18 First: [Defendant] intentionally committed certain acts.
19

20 Second: Those acts violated [plaintiff’s] Fourth Amendment right not to be subjected to 21 excessive force.
22

23 In determining whether [defendant’s] acts constituted excessive force, you must ask 24 whether the amount of force [defendant] used was the amount which a reasonable officer would 25 have used in [making the arrest] [conducting the stop] under similar circumstances. You should 26 consider all the relevant facts and circumstances (leading up to the time of the [arrest] [stop]) that 27 [defendant] reasonably believed to be true at the time of the [arrest] [stop]. You should consider 28 those facts and circumstances in order to assess whether there was a need for the application of 29 force, and the relationship between that need for force, if any, and the amount of force applied.
30 The circumstances relevant to this assessment can include [list any of the following factors, and 31 any other factors, warranted by the evidence]:
32

- 33 • the severity of the crime at issue;
- 34 • whether [plaintiff] posed an immediate threat to the safety of [defendant] or others;
- 35 • the possibility that [plaintiff] was armed;
- 36 • the possibility that other persons subject to the police action were violent or dangerous;
- 37 • whether [plaintiff] was actively resisting arrest or attempting to evade arrest by flight;
- 38 • the duration of [defendant’s] action;
- 39 • the number of persons with whom [defendant] had to contend; and

4.9 Section 1983 – Excessive Force – “Seizure”

- whether the physical force applied was of such an extent as to lead to unnecessary injury.

The reasonableness of [defendant’s] acts must be judged from the perspective of a reasonable officer on the scene. The law permits the officer to use only that degree of force necessary to [make the arrest] [conduct the stop]. However, not every push or shove by a police officer, even if it may later seem unnecessary in the peace and quiet of this courtroom, constitutes excessive force. The concept of reasonableness makes allowance for the fact that police officers are often forced to make split-second judgments in circumstances that are sometimes tense, uncertain, and rapidly evolving, about the amount of force that is necessary in a particular situation.

As I told you earlier, [plaintiff] must prove that [defendant] intended to commit the acts in question; but apart from that requirement, [defendant’s] actual motivation is irrelevant. If the force [defendant] used was unreasonable, it does not matter whether [defendant] had good motivations. And an officer’s improper motive will not establish excessive force if the force used was objectively reasonable.

What matters is whether [defendant’s] acts were objectively reasonable in light of the facts and circumstances confronting the defendant.

Comment

Applicability of the Fourth Amendment standard for excessive force. Claims of “excessive force in the course of making an arrest, investigatory stop, or other ‘seizure’” are analyzed under the Fourth Amendment. Graham v. Connor, 490 U.S. 386, 388 (1989). By contrast, claims of excessive force that arise after a criminal defendant has been convicted and sentenced are analyzed under the Eighth Amendment, see id. at 392 n.6; see also Torres v. McLaughlin, 163 F.3d 169, 174 (3d Cir. 1998) (holding that “post-conviction incarceration cannot be a seizure within the meaning of the Fourth Amendment”). The Supreme Court “ha[s] not resolved the question whether the Fourth Amendment continues to provide individuals with protection against the deliberate use of excessive physical force beyond the point at which arrest ends and pretrial detention begins.” Graham, 490 U.S. at 395 n.10; compare Fuentes v. Wagner, 206 F.3d 335, 347 (3d Cir. 2000) (holding that the Fourth Amendment objective reasonableness test did not apply to “a pretrial detainee’s excessive force claim arising in the context of a prison disturbance” (emphasis in original)). “It is clear, however, that the Due Process Clause protects a pretrial detainee from the use of excessive force that amounts to punishment.” Graham, 490 U.S. at 395 n.10.

Because the excessive force standards differ depending on the source of the constitutional protection, it will be necessary to determine which standard ought to apply. The Fourth

4.9 Section 1983 – Excessive Force – “Seizure”

1 Amendment excessive force standard attaches at the point of a “seizure.” See Abraham v. Raso,
2 183 F.3d 279, 288 (3d Cir. 1999) (“To state a claim for excessive force as an unreasonable seizure
3 under the Fourth Amendment, a plaintiff must show that a ‘seizure’ occurred and that it was 4 unreasonable.”). A “seizure” occurs when a government official has, “by means of physical force
5 or show of authority, . . . in some way restrained [the person’s] liberty.” Terry v. Ohio, 392 U.S.
6 1, 19 n.16 (1968); see also Brower v. County of Inyo, 489 U.S. 593, 596 (1989); Berg v. County of 7 Allegheny, 219 F.3d 261, 269 (3d Cir. 2000) (per curiam) (“A person is seized for Fourth
8 Amendment purposes only if he is detained by means intentionally applied to terminate his 9 freedom of movement.”).

11 The Fourth Amendment excessive force standard continues to apply during the process of 12 the arrest. In U.S. v. Johnstone, the court held that a Fourth Amendment excessive force instruction 13 was proper where “the excessive force committed by Johnstone took place during the arrests of 14 Sudziarski, Perez, and Blevins, even if those victims were in handcuffs.” U.S. v. Johnstone, 107
15 F.3d 200, 205 (3d Cir. 1997). As the Johnstone Court explained,

17 a ‘seizure’ can be a process, a kind of continuum, and is not necessarily a discrete 18 moment of initial restraint. Graham shows us that a citizen can remain “free” for 19 Fourth Amendment purposes for some time after he or she is stopped by police and 20 even handcuffed. Hence, pre-trial detention does not necessarily begin the moment
21 that a suspect is not free to leave; rather, the seizure can continue and the Fourth 22 Amendment protection against unreasonable seizures can apply beyond that point.

24 Johnstone, 107 F.3d at 206-07; see also id. at 206 (holding that “Johnstone’s assault on Perez in 25 the police station garage, after he had been transported from the scene of the initial beating ... also 26 occurred during the course of Perez’s arrest”).

27
28 The model is designed for cases in which it is not in dispute that the challenged conduct 29 occurred during a “seizure.”

31 The content of the Fourth Amendment standard for excessive force. The Fourth 32 Amendment permits the use of “reasonable” force. Graham, 490 U.S. at 396. “[E]ach case 33 alleging excessive force must be evaluated under the totality of the circumstances.” Sharrar v.
34 Felsing, 128 F.3d 810, 822 (3d Cir. 1997); see also Rivas v. City of Passaic, 365 F.3d 181, 198 35 (3d Cir. 2004) (“While some courts ‘freeze the time frame’ and consider only the facts and 36 circumstances at the precise moment that excessive force is applied, other courts, including this 37 one, have considered all of the relevant facts and circumstances leading up to the time that the 38 officers allegedly used excessive force.”); Abraham, 183 F.3d at 291 (expressing “disagreement
39 with those courts which have held that analysis of ‘reasonableness’ under the Fourth Amendment
40 requires excluding any evidence of events preceding the actual ‘seizure’”); Curley v. Klem, 499 41 F.3d 199, 212 (3d Cir. 2007) (“Curley II”) (noting with approval the district court’s view “that the

4.9 Section 1983 – Excessive Force – “Seizure”

1 analysis in this case could not properly be shrunk into the few moments immediately before Klem
2 shot Curley, but instead must be decided in light of all the events which had taken place over the 3 course of the entire evening”).¹⁴⁵ Determining reasonableness “requires careful attention to the 4 facts and circumstances of each particular case, including the severity of the crime at issue, whether 5 the suspect poses an immediate threat to the safety of the officers or others, and whether he is 6 actively resisting arrest or attempting to evade arrest by flight.” Graham, 490 U.S. at 396.¹⁴⁶ Other 7 relevant factors may include “the possibility that the persons subject to the police action are violent
8 or dangerous, the duration of the action, whether the action takes place in the context of effecting 9 an arrest, the possibility that the suspect may be armed, and the number of persons with whom the 10 police officers must contend at one time.” Kopec v. Tate, 361 F.3d 772, 777 (3d Cir. 2004).

12 Physical injury is relevant but it is not a prerequisite of an excessive force claim. See 13 Sharrar, 128 F.3d at 822 (“We do not agree that the absence of physical injury necessarily signifies 14 that the force has not been excessive, although the fact that the physical force applied was of such 15 an extent as to lead to injury is indeed a relevant factor to be considered as part of the totality.”); 16 see also Mellott v. Heemer, 161 F.3d 117, 123 (3d Cir. 1998) (citing “the lack of any physical 17 injury to the plaintiffs” as one of the factors supporting court’s conclusion that force used was 18 objectively reasonable).

20 In the past, the court of appeals treated the use of deadly force as subject to more

¹⁴⁵ However, the court of appeals has rejected the contention that a lack of probable cause to make an arrest in itself establishes that the force used in making the arrest was excessive. See Snell v. City of York, 564 F.3d 659, 672 (3d Cir. 2009) (rejecting plaintiff’s argument “that the force applied was excessive solely because probable cause was lacking for his arrest”).

¹⁴⁶ This inquiry should be based on the facts that the officer reasonably believed to be true at the time of the encounter. See Saucier v. Katz, 533 U.S. 194, 205 (2001) (“If an officer reasonably, but mistakenly, believed that a suspect was likely to fight back ... the officer would be justified in using more force than in fact was needed.”); Estate of Smith v. Marasco, 318 F.3d 497, 516-17 (3d Cir. 2003) (analyzing Fourth Amendment excessive force claim based on officers’ knowledge or “objectively reasonable belief” concerning relevant facts); Curley v. Klem, 298 F.3d 271, 280 (3d Cir. 2002) (“Curley I”) (holding that, viewed in light most favorable to plaintiff, evidence established excessive force because “under [plaintiff]’s account of events, it was unreasonable for [defendant] to fire at [plaintiff] based on his unfounded, mistaken conclusion that [plaintiff] was the suspect in question”). One ground for finding an officer’s belief unreasonable is that a reasonable officer would have taken a step that would have revealed the belief to be erroneous. See Curley I, 298 F.3d at 281 (analyzing qualified immunity question based on the assumption “that a reasonable officer in Klem’s position would have looked inside the Camry upon arriving at the scene”).

4.9 Section 1983 – Excessive Force – “Seizure”

1 particularized rules. See Abraham, 183 F.3d at 289 (citing Graham and Tennessee v. Garner, 471
2 U.S. 1, 3 (1985)). Accordingly, an instruction was provided for use in cases where Garner’s deadly
3 force analysis was appropriate. See infra Instruction 4.9.1. The Supreme Court has cautioned, 4 however, that some uses of deadly force—such as an officer’s decision to stop a fleeing driver by 5 ramming the car—are not amenable to Garner analysis because their facts differ significantly from 6 those in Garner; such cases should receive the more general Graham reasonableness analysis. See
7 Scott v. Harris, 127 S. Ct. 1769, 1777 (2007) (“Garner did not establish a magical on/off switch
8 that triggers rigid preconditions whenever an officer’s actions constitute ‘deadly force.’ Garner
9 was simply an application of the Fourth Amendment’s ‘reasonableness’ test . . . , to the use of a 10 particular type of force in a particular situation.”); Plumhoff v. Rickard, 134 S. Ct. 2012 (2014)
11 (following Scott where officers shot the driver rather than ramming his car, after a collision brought 12 him to a near standstill, because a reasonable police officer would have concluded that the driver 13 “was intent on resuming his flight and that, if he was allowed to do so, he would again pose a 14 deadly threat to others on the road”); Mullenix v. Luna, 136 S. Ct. 305 (2015) (relying on Scott v.
15 Harris and Plumhoff v. Rickard in concluding that a police officer who shot at a fleeing car in an 16 effort to disable the car, but hit and killed the driver, was protected by qualified immunity).

18 Moreover, in Johnson v. Philadelphia, 837 F.3d 343, 349 (3d Cir. 2016), the court of 19 appeals stated, “Scott abrogates our use of special standards in deadly-force cases and reinstates 20 ‘reasonableness’ as the ultimate—and only—inquiry.” However, it immediately added, “This is 21 not to say that the considerations enumerated in Garner are irrelevant to the reasonableness 22 analysis; to the contrary, in many cases, including this one, a proper assessment of the threat of 23 injury or the risk of flight is crucial to identifying the magnitude of the governmental interests at 24 stake. But such considerations are simply the means by which we approach the ultimate inquiry, 25 not the constitutional requirements in their own right.” Id. at 349-50.

26 A literal reading of Johnson suggests that Instruction 4.9 should be used in all excessive
27 force cases. Nevertheless, there may be cases in which it would be appropriate to incorporate some 28 of the considerations from Instruction 4.9.1 into Instruction 4.9. So, too, the discussion of relevant 29 considerations in Comment 4.9.1 may be helpful in some cases. Accordingly, Instruction 4.9.1 and 30 Comment 4.9.1 have not been deleted, but instead are provided as an additional resource.

31 Reasonableness “must be judged from the perspective of a reasonable officer on the scene, 32 rather than with the 20/20 vision of hindsight”; and the decisionmaker must consider “that police 33 officers are often forced to make split second judgments – in circumstances that are tense, 34 uncertain, and rapidly evolving – about the amount of force that is necessary in a particular 35 situation.” Graham, 490 U.S. at 396-97.

37 The defendant’s actual “intent or motivation” is irrelevant; what matters is whether the 38 defendant’s acts were “‘objectively reasonable’ in light of the facts and circumstances 39 confronting” the defendant. Id. at 397; see also Estate of Smith v. Marasco, 318 F.3d 497, 515 (3d 40 Cir. 2003) (“[I]f a use of force is objectively unreasonable, an officer’s good faith is irrelevant;

4.9 Section 1983 – Excessive Force – “Seizure”

1 likewise, if a use of force is objectively reasonable, any bad faith motivation on the officer's part
2 is immaterial.”¹⁴⁷ (However, evidence that the defendant disliked the plaintiff can be considered
3 when weighing the credibility of the defendant’s testimony. See Graham, 490 U.S. at 399 n.12.)

5 Heck v. Humphrey. If a convicted prisoner must show that his or her conviction was 6 erroneous in order to establish a Section 1983 unlawful arrest claim, then the plaintiff cannot 7 proceed with the claim until the conviction has been reversed or otherwise invalidated. See Heck
8 v. Humphrey, 512 U.S. 477, 486-87 & n.6 (1994) (giving the example of a conviction “for the 9 crime of resisting arrest, defined as intentionally preventing a peace officer from effecting a lawful 10 arrest”).¹⁴⁸ In Lora-Pena v. F.B.I., 529 F.3d 503 (3d Cir. 2008), the court of appeals held that Heck
11 did not bar excessive force claims by a plaintiff who had been convicted of assault on a federal 12 officer and resisting arrest; the court reasoned that the plaintiff’s “convictions for resisting arrest 13 and assaulting officers would not be inconsistent with a holding that the officers, during a lawful 14 arrest, used excessive (or unlawful) force in response to his own unlawful actions.” Id. at 506.

¹⁴⁷ Of course, a defendant will not be liable for using excessive force if she did not intend to commit the acts that constituted the excessive force. Thus, in holding that “the district court erred by instructing the jury as to ‘deliberate indifference’” in the context of a Fourth Amendment excessive force claim, the Third Circuit noted that “there is no dispute that Wilson committed intentional acts when he arrested Mosley and used physical force against him. Whether he intended to violate his civil rights in the process is irrelevant.” Mosley v. Wilson, 102 F.3d 85, 95 (3d Cir. 1996).

¹⁴⁸ See generally Comment 4.12 (discussing the implications of Heck).

29 The Fourth Amendment to the United States Constitution protects persons from being 30 subjected to excessive force while being [arrested] [stopped by police]. In other words, a law
31 enforcement official may only use the amount of force necessary under the circumstances to [make 32 the arrest] [conduct the stop]. Every person has the constitutional right not to be subjected to 33 excessive force while being [arrested] [stopped by police], even if the [arrest] [stop] is otherwise 34 proper.
35

36 In this case, [plaintiff] claims that [defendant] violated [plaintiff’s] Fourth Amendment 37 rights by using deadly force against [plaintiff] [plaintiff’s decedent].
38

39 An officer may not use deadly force to prevent a suspect from escaping unless deadly force

4.9.1 Section 1983 – Garner-Type Deadly Force Cases

1 is necessary to prevent the escape and the officer has probable cause to believe that the suspect
2 poses a significant threat of death or serious physical injury to the officer or others. Also, the 3 officer must give the suspect a warning before using deadly force, if it is feasible under the 4 circumstances to give such a warning.

6 In order to establish that [defendant] violated the Fourth Amendment by using deadly force,
7 [plaintiff] must prove that [defendant] intentionally committed acts that constituted deadly force
8 against [plaintiff]. If you find that [defendant] [describe nature of deadly force alleged by 9 plaintiff], then you have found that [defendant] used deadly force. In addition, [plaintiff] must 10 prove [at least one of the following things]¹⁴⁹:

- 11
- 12 • deadly force was not necessary to prevent [plaintiff's] escape; or
 - 13 • [defendant] did not have probable cause to believe that [plaintiff] posed a significant threat
 - 14 of serious physical injury to [defendant] or others; or
 - 15 • it would have been feasible for [defendant] to give [plaintiff] a warning before using deadly
 - 16 force, but [defendant] did not do so.
- 17

18 You should consider all the relevant facts and circumstances (leading up to the time of the 19 encounter) that [defendant] reasonably believed to be true at the time of the encounter. The 20 reasonableness of [defendant's] acts must be judged from the perspective of a reasonable officer 21 on the scene. The concept of reasonableness makes allowance for the fact that police officers are 22 often forced to make split-second judgments in circumstances that are sometimes tense, uncertain, 23 and rapidly evolving, about the amount of force that is necessary in a particular situation.

25 As I told you earlier, [plaintiff] must prove that [defendant] intended to commit the acts in 26 question; but apart from that requirement, [defendant's] actual motivation is irrelevant. If the force 27 [defendant] used was unreasonable, it does not matter whether [defendant] had good motivations.
28 And an officer's improper motive will not establish excessive force if the force used was 29 objectively reasonable.

30 31 32 Comment

33
34 The Fourth Amendment excessive force standard discussed in Comment 4.9, supra, applies 35 to cases arising from the use of deadly force; but such cases have also generated some more
36 specific guidance from the Supreme Court and the Court of Appeals. As discussed in this ¹⁴⁹ Include all bullet points that are warranted by the evidence. Include the bracketed language if listing more than one bullet point.

4.9.1 Section 1983 – Garner-Type Deadly Force Cases

1 Comment, in some cases involving the use of deadly force the court should use Instruction 4.9
2 (and not Instruction 4.9.1), while other cases may parallel the facts of Tennessee v. Garner, 471
3 U.S. 1, 3 (1985), closely enough to warrant the use of Instruction 4.9.1 instead.

5 The Supreme Court has held that deadly force may not be used “to prevent the escape of 6 an apparently unarmed suspected felon . . . unless it is necessary to prevent the escape and the 7 officer has probable cause to believe that the suspect poses a significant threat of death or serious
8 physical injury to the officer or others.” Tennessee v. Garner, 471 U.S. 1, 3 (1985).¹⁵⁰ “Where 9 the suspect poses no immediate threat to the officer and no threat to others, the harm resulting from 10 failing to apprehend him does not justify the use of deadly force to do so.” Garner, 471 U.S. at 11 11.

13 However, “[w]here the officer has probable cause to believe that the suspect poses a threat 14 of serious physical harm, either to the officer or to others, it is not constitutionally unreasonable to 15 prevent escape by using deadly force.” Garner, 471 U.S. at 11. Accordingly, “if the suspect 16 threatens the officer with a weapon or there is probable cause to believe that he has committed a 17 crime involving the infliction or threatened infliction of serious physical harm, deadly force may 18 be used if necessary to prevent escape, and if, where feasible, some warning has been given.”
19 Garner, 471 U.S. at 11-12.

21 The Court of Appeals has summed up the standard as follows: “Giving due regard to the 22 pressures faced by the police, was it objectively reasonable for the officer to believe, in light of 23 the totality of the circumstances, that deadly force was necessary to prevent the suspect's escape, 24 and that the suspect posed a significant threat of death or serious physical injury to the officer or 25 others?” Abraham v. Raso, 183 F.3d 279, 289 (3d Cir. 1999) (citing Graham v. Connor, 490 U.S.
26 386 (1989), and Garner).
27

28 It is important to note that the Garner test will not apply to all uses of deadly force. As 29 noted in Comment 4.9, the Supreme Court has cautioned that some types of deadly force – such 30 as an officer’s decision to stop a fleeing driver by ramming the car – are not amenable to Garner
31 analysis because their facts differ significantly from those in Garner; such cases should receive 32 the more general Graham reasonableness analysis. See Scott v. Harris, 127 S. Ct. 1769, 1777
33 (2007) (“Garner did not establish a magical on/off switch that triggers rigid preconditions
34 whenever an officer's actions constitute ‘deadly force.’ Garner was simply an application of the 35 Fourth Amendment’s ‘reasonableness’ test . . . , to the use of a particular type of force in a particular 36 situation.”). After a detailed analysis of the circumstances of the car chase in Scott, the Court
37 concluded on the facts of that case that “[a] police officer's attempt to terminate a dangerous

¹⁵⁰ “[T]here can be no question that apprehension by the use of deadly force is a seizure subject to the reasonableness requirement of the Fourth Amendment.” Garner, 471 U.S. at 7.

4.9.1 Section 1983 – Garner-Type Deadly Force Cases

1 high-speed car chase that threatens the lives of innocent bystanders does not violate the Fourth
2 Amendment, even when it places the fleeing motorist at risk of serious injury or death.” Scott, 127
3 S. Ct. at 1779. In Plumhoff v. Rickard, 134 S. Ct. 2012 (2014), the Supreme Court saw “no basis
4 for reaching a different conclusion” than in Scott, even though the officers shot the driver who had 5 led them on a dangerous high-speed chase car chase. Plumhoff demonstrates that the line between 6 Garner-type deadly force cases and other deadly force cases is not fixed by whether police officers
7 shoot a person (rather than ram his car). It may suggest more broadly that more cases should be 8 assimilated to the general standards of Section 4.9, with fewer governed by the particularized
9 standards of Section 4.9.1. See also Mullenix v. Luna, 136 S. Ct. 305 (2015) (relying on Scott v.
10 Harris and Plumhoff v. Rickard in concluding that a police officer who shot at a fleeing car in an 11 effort to disable the car, but hit and killed the driver, was protected by qualified immunity).
12 Nevertheless, particularly since Plumhoff and Mullenix, like Scott, involved a car chase, it remains
13 true, as noted above, that other cases may parallel the facts of Tennessee v. Garner, 471 U.S. 1, 3 14 (1985), closely enough to warrant the use of Instruction 4.9.1.

16 What constitutes deadly force.¹⁵¹ Although Garner concerned a shooting, the Court’s 17 reasoning potentially extends to other types of lethal force. See Garner, 471 U.S. at 31 (O’Connor, 18 J., joined by Burger, C.J., and Rehnquist, J., dissenting) (“By declining to limit its holding to the 19 use of firearms, the Court unnecessarily implies that the Fourth Amendment constrains the use of 20 any police practice that is potentially lethal, no matter how remote the risk.”).

22 The Court of Appeals has not provided much guidance on the scope and nature of the term 23 “deadly force.”¹⁵² In re City of Philadelphia Litigation is the only case in which the Court of 24 Appeals has so far confronted the question of defining deadly force for Garner purposes.¹⁵³ The

¹⁵³ Compare In re City of Philadelphia Litigation, 49 F.3d 945, 966 (3d Cir. 1995) (opinion of Greenberg, J.) (concluding that defendants’ actions in dropping explosive on roof of house and allowing ensuing fire to burn did not constitute “deadly force” so as to trigger Garner standard), and id. at 973 n.1 (opinion of Scirica, J.) (“Although I believe the police may have used deadly force against the MOVE members, that confrontation is readily distinguishable from

1 extraordinary facts of that case, coupled with the fact that none of the opinions handed down
2 clearly commanded a majority of the panel on the definitional question,¹⁵⁴ render it difficult to 3 distill principles from that case that can be applied more generally. However, at least two members
4 of the panel in City of Philadelphia relied upon the Model Penal Code’s definition of deadly force
5 “as ‘force which the actor uses with the purpose of causing or which he knows to create a 6 substantial risk of causing death or serious bodily harm,’”¹⁵⁵ and one district court has since 7 followed the MPC definition, see Schall v. Vazquez, 322 F.Supp.2d 594, 600 (E.D.Pa. 2004) 8 (holding that “[p]ointing a loaded gun at another person is a display of deadly force”).

10 In some cases, there may be a jury question as to whether the force employed was “deadly.”
11 See, e.g., Marley v. City of Allentown, 774 F. Supp. 343, 346 (E.D. Pa. 1991) (rejecting contention 12 “that the court erred in instructing the jury to determine whether or not the force Officer Effting 13 used was ‘deadly’”), aff’d without opinion, 961 F.2d 1567 (3d Cir. 1992). In such cases, it may 14 be necessary to instruct the jury both on deadly force and on excessive force more generally. See 15 id. However, if the court can resolve as a matter of law whether the force used was deadly or not,
16 the court should rule on this question and should provide either Instruction 4.9 or Instruction 4.9.1
17 but not both.

18 19 Probable cause to believe suspect dangerous. Probable cause to believe a suspect has 20 committed a burglary does not, “without regard to the other circumstances, automatically justify the situation in Garner.”), with id. at 978 n.1 (opinion of Lewis, J.) (“I believe that Garner controls, and under Garner, it is clear to me that the deadly force used here was excessive as a matter of law and, therefore, unlawful.”). The panel members’ debate, in In re City of Philadelphia Litigation, over whether Garner was the appropriate standard to apply prefigured the Supreme Court’s decision, in Scott v. Harris, to limit the reach of the Garner test.

The Court of Appeals has decided other cases involving use of deadly force, but because those cases involved shootings, see, e.g., Carswell v. Borough of Homestead, 381 F.3d 235, 237 (3d Cir. 2004), the court did not have occasion to consider what other types of force could fall within the definition of “deadly force.”

¹⁵⁴ The portion of Judge Greenberg’s opinion that addressed the definition of deadly force was joined by Judge Scirica, “but only for the limited purpose of agreeing that Tennessee v.
Garner is inapplicable and that the appropriate inquiry is the reasonableness of the city defendants’ acts.” In re City of Philadelphia Litigation, 49 F.3d at 964-65.

¹⁵⁵ In re City of Philadelphia Litigation, 49 F.3d at 966 (opinion of Greenberg, J.)
(quoting Model Penal Code § 3.11(2) (1994) and finding no deadly force); see also id. at 977

4.9.1 Section 1983 – Garner-Type Deadly Force Cases

1 the use of deadly force.” Garner, 471 U.S. 21 (stating that “the fact that an unarmed suspect has 2 broken into a dwelling at night does not automatically mean he is physically dangerous”). The 3 Garner Court did not elaborate the range of circumstances that would provide the requisite
4 showing of probable cause to believe the suspect dangerous. See Garner, 471 U.S. at 32
5 (O’Connor, J., joined by Burger, C.J., and Rehnquist, J., dissenting) (“Police are given no guidance
6 for determining which objects, among an array of potentially lethal weapons ranging from guns to 7 knives to baseball bats to rope, will justify the use of deadly force.”).¹⁵⁶

9 It is clear, however, that the relevant danger can be either to the officer¹⁵⁷ or to a third 10 person.¹⁵⁸ The jury should “determine, after deciding what the real risk . . . was, what was 11 objectively reasonable for an officer in [the defendant]’s position to believe . . . , giving due regard 12 to the pressures of the moment.” Abraham, 183 F.3d at 294. An officer is not justified in using 13 deadly force at a point in time when there is no longer probable cause to believe the suspect 14 dangerous, even if deadly force would have been justified at an earlier point in time. See id. (“A 15 passing risk to a police officer is not an ongoing license to kill an otherwise unthreatening
16 suspect.”).¹⁵⁹ Thus, for example, the Court of Appeals cited with approval a Ninth Circuit case

¹⁵⁶ In Brosseau v. Haugen, 543 U.S. 194 (2004) (per curiam), the Court characterized the choice facing the defendant as “whether to shoot a disturbed felon, set on avoiding capture through vehicular flight, when persons in the immediate area are at risk from that flight,” and the Court held that the defendant’s decision to shoot did not violate a clearly established right, see id. at 200.

Justice Stevens believed the qualified immunity issue in Brosseau presented a jury question; as he pointed out, “[r]espondent Haugen had not threatened anyone with a weapon, and petitioner Brosseau did not shoot in order to defend herself. Haugen was not a person who had committed a violent crime; nor was there any reason to believe he would do so if permitted to escape. Indeed, there is nothing in the record to suggest he intended to harm anyone.” Brosseau, 543 U.S. at 204 (Stevens, J., dissenting) (footnote omitted); see id. at 207 n.5 (“The factual issues relate only to the danger that [Haugen] posed while in the act of escaping.”).

¹⁵⁸ See Abraham, 183 F.3d at 293 (“[T]he undisputed facts are that Abraham had stolen some clothing, resisted arrest, hit or bumped into a car, and was reasonably believed to be intoxicated. Given these facts, a jury could quite reasonably conclude that Abraham did not pose a risk of death or serious bodily injury to others and that Raso could not reasonably believe that he did.”).

¹⁵⁹ Compare id. at 294-95 (“We can, of course, readily imagine circumstances where a

4.9.1 Section 1983 – Garner-Type Deadly Force Cases

1 holding that “the fact that a suspect attacked an officer, giving the officer reason to use deadly
2 force, did not necessarily justify continuing to use lethal force” at a time when “[t]he officer knew 3 help was on the way, had a number of weapons besides his gun, could see that [the suspect] was 4 unarmed and bleeding from multiple gunshot wounds, and had a number of opportunities to evade
5 him.” Abraham, 183 F.3d at 295 (discussing Hopkins v. Andaya, 958 F.2d 881 (9th Cir.1992));
6 see also Lamont ex rel. Estate of Quick v. New Jersey, 637 F.3d 177, 184 (3d Cir. 2011) (“Even 8 has become evident that the threat justifying the force has vanished.”).

10 Conduct giving rise to a need for deadly force. In Grazier v. City of Philadelphia, then-11 Chief Judge Becker argued in dissent that “it was an abuse of discretion for the trial judge not to 12 explain to the jury at least the general principle that conduct on the officers' part that unreasonably 13 precipitated the need to use deadly force may provide a basis for holding that the eventual use of 14 deadly force was unreasonable in violation of the Fourth Amendment.” Grazier v. City of 15 Philadelphia, 328 F.3d 120, 130 (3d Cir. 2003) (Becker, C.J., dissenting) (citing Estate of Starks
16 v. Enyart, 5 F.3d 230, 234 (7th Cir.1993), and Gilmere v. City of Atlanta, 774 F.2d 1495, 1501
17 (11th Cir.1985) (en banc)).¹⁶⁰ The Grazier majority, noting that the plaintiffs had not requested
18 that particular charge, reviewed the district court’s charge under a plain error standard. See id. at 19 127. The majority found no plain error:

fleeing suspect would have posed such a dire threat to an officer, thereby demonstrating that the suspect posed a serious threat to others, that the officer could justifiably use deadly force to stop the suspect's flight even after the officer escaped harm's way.”).

¹⁶⁰ As Chief Judge Becker noted, the facts in Grazier included the following: “[T]he defendants were plain-clothes officers, forbidden by Regulations to make traffic stops, and . . .
were driving an unmarked car (in a high crime neighborhood) which they pulled perpendicularly in front of plaintiffs' car to make a traffic stop, also in violation of department policy,” Grazier, 328 F.3d at 131 (Becker, C.J., dissenting) – with the result, according to the plaintiff driver’s testimony, that he believed he was being carjacked, see id. at 123 (majority opinion). Compare Bodine v. Warwick, 72 F.3d 393, 400 (3d Cir. 1995) (stating that officers who entered a dwelling unlawfully “would not be liable for harm produced by a ‘superseding cause,’ . . . [a]nd they certainly would not be liable for harm that was caused by their non-tortious, as opposed to their tortious, ‘conduct,’ such as the use of reasonable force to arrest [the plaintiff]”); Lamont ex rel.
Estate of Quick v. New Jersey, 637 F.3d 177, 186 (3d Cir. 2011) (following Bodine and holding that “the troopers' decision to enter the woods did not proximately cause Quick's death. Rather, Quick's noncompliant, threatening conduct in the woods was a superseding cause that served to break the chain of causation”).

4.9.1 Section 1983 – Garner-Type Deadly Force Cases

1 Our Court has not endorsed the doctrine discussed in Gilmere and Starks and, in 2 fact, has recognized disagreement among circuit courts on this issue. See Abraham
3 v. Raso, 183 F.3d 279, 295-96 (3d Cir.1999). In Abraham, we announced that “[w]e 4 will leave for another day how these cases should be reconciled.” Id. at 296. In this 5 context, the District Court did not abuse its discretion by refusing to instruct the 6 jury on a doctrine that our Circuit has not adopted. As such, plain error of course 7 did not occur.

9 Grazier, 328 F.3d at 127.

10
11 Municipal liability. In discussing municipal liability, the Supreme Court has noted that 12
13 city policymakers know to a moral certainty that their police officers will be 14 required to arrest fleeing felons. The city has armed its officers with firearms, in 15 part to allow them to accomplish this task. Thus, the need to train officers in the 16 constitutional limitations on the use of deadly force ... can be said to be “so 17 obvious,” that failure to do so could properly be characterized as “deliberate 18 indifference” to constitutional rights.

19
20 City of Canton, Ohio v. Harris, 489 U.S. 378, 390 n.10 (1989).

21
22 In some cases, the question may arise whether a municipality can be held liable for failure
23 to equip its officers with an alternative to deadly force. See Carswell v. Borough of Homestead, 24 381 F.3d 235, 245 (3d Cir. 2004) (“[W]e have never recognized municipal liability for a
25 constitutional violation because of failure to equip police officers with non-lethal weapons. We 26 decline to do so on the record before us.”); compare id. at 250 (McKee, J., dissenting in relevant 27 part) (arguing that plaintiff had viable claim against municipality based on plaintiff’s contention 28 that municipality’s “policy of requiring training only in using deadly force and equipping officers
29 only with a lethal weapon, caused Officer Snyder to use lethal force even though he did not think 30 it reasonable or necessary to do so”).

1 4.10 Section 1983 – Excessive Force – Convicted Prisoner

5 The Eighth Amendment to the United States Constitution, which prohibits cruel and 6 unusual punishment, protects convicted prisoners from malicious and sadistic uses of physical 7 force by prison officials.

9 In this case, [plaintiff] claims that [defendant] [briefly describe plaintiff’s allegations].

10
11 In order to establish [his/her] claim for violation of the Eighth Amendment, [plaintiff] must 12 prove that [defendant] used force against [him/her] maliciously, for the purpose of causing harm, 13 rather than in a good faith effort to maintain or restore discipline. It is not enough to show that, in 14 hindsight, the amount of force seems unreasonable; the plaintiff must show that the defendant used
15 force maliciously, for the purpose of causing harm. When I use the word “maliciously,” I mean 16 intentionally injuring another, without just cause or reason, and doing so with excessive cruelty or 17 a delight in cruelty. [Plaintiff] must also prove that [defendant’s] use of force caused some [harm]
18 [physical injury]¹⁶¹ to [him/her].

20 In deciding whether [plaintiff] has proven this claim, you should consider [whether 21 [defendant] used force against [plaintiff],] whether there was a need for the application of force, 22 and the relationship between that need for force, if any, and the amount of force applied. In 23 considering whether there was a need for force, you should consider all the relevant facts and 24 circumstances that [defendant] reasonably believed to be true at the time of the encounter. Such 25 circumstances can include whether [defendant] reasonably perceived a threat to the safety of staff
26 or inmates, and if so, the extent of that threat. In addition, you should consider whether [defendant] 27 made any efforts to temper the severity of the force [he/she] used.

28
29 You should also consider [whether [plaintiff] was physically injured and the extent of such 30 injury] [the extent of [plaintiff’s] injuries]. But a use of force can violate the Eighth Amendment
31 even if it does not cause significant injury. Although the extent of any injuries to [plaintiff] may 32 help you assess whether a use of force was legitimate, a malicious and sadistic use of force violates 33 the Eighth Amendment even if it produces no significant physical injury.

36 Comment

¹⁶¹ See Comment for a discussion of whether harm (and physical injury in particular), constitutes an element of this claim.

4.10 Section 1983 – Excessive Force – Convicted Prisoner

1 Applicability of the Eighth Amendment standard for excessive force. The Eighth
2 Amendment’s “Cruel and Unusual Punishments Clause ‘was designed to protect those convicted
3 of crimes,’ . . . and consequently the Clause applies ‘only after the State has complied with the 4 constitutional guarantees traditionally associated with criminal prosecutions.’” Whitley v. Albers,
5 475 U.S. 312, 318 (1986) (quoting Ingraham v. Wright, 430 U.S. 651, 671 n.40 (1977)). It appears 6 that the Eighth Amendment technically does not apply to a convicted prisoner until after the 7 prisoner has been sentenced. See Graham v. Connor, 490 U.S. 386, 392 n.6 (1989) (stating in 8 dictum that the view that “the Eighth Amendment’s protections [do] not attach until after 9 conviction and sentence” was “confirmed by Ingraham v. Wright, 430 U.S. 651, 671 n. 40
10 (1977)”; Fuentes v. Wagner, 206 F.3d 335, 347 (3d Cir. 2000) (holding that the status under the 11 Constitution of a convicted inmate awaiting sentence is “that of a pretrial detainee”).

13 In Kingsley v. Hendrickson, 135 S. Ct. 2466 (2015), the Supreme Court held that a pretrial 14 detainee must show only that the force used was “objectively unreasonable” in order to prevail on 15 an excessive force claim. It noted that, as to the defendant’s “physical acts,” such as swinging a 16 fist into a face, the defendant “must possess a purposeful, a knowing, or possibly a reckless state 17 of mind.” Id. at 2472. But in determining the proper interpretation of that force—whether it is 18 constitutionally excessive—the proper inquiry is one of objective reasonableness, with no need to 19 find that the defendant, as a subjective matter, acted maliciously and sadistically to cause harm.

20
21 Kingsley would appear to overrule Fuentes v. Wagner, 206 F.3d 335, 347 (3d Cir. 2000), 22 which had explicitly rejected the objective reasonableness standard and held that the Eighth 23 Amendment standard of “maliciously and sadistically for the very purpose of causing harm” 24 applied to pretrial detainees.

26 In what may prove to be quite significant for the future, Kingsley noted, “We acknowledge 27 that our view that an objective standard is appropriate in the context of excessive force claims
28 brought by pretrial detainees pursuant to the Fourteenth Amendment may raise questions about 29 the use of a subjective standard in the context of excessive force claims brought by convicted 30 prisoners.” 135 S. Ct. at 2476. However, it added, “We are not confronted with such a claim, 31 however, so we need not address that issue today.” Id. Until that happens, the Instruction and 32 following commentary remain good law. Readers should be aware, however, that Kingsley could 33 eventually result in a major change to this area of law.

35 Content of the Eighth Amendment standard for excessive force. “The infliction of pain in 36 the course of a prison security measure ... does not amount to cruel and unusual punishment simply 37 because it may appear in retrospect that the degree of force authorized or applied for security 38 purposes was unreasonable.” Whitley, 475 U.S. at 319. Rather, “whenever prison officials stand
39 accused of using excessive physical force in violation of the Cruel and Unusual Punishments
40 Clause,” the issue is “whether force was applied in a good faith effort to maintain or restore
41 discipline, or maliciously and sadistically to cause harm.” Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 6-7

4.10 Section 1983 – Excessive Force – Convicted Prisoner

1 (1992).¹⁶² The Court has stressed that prison officials’ decisions are entitled to deference; although 2 this deference “does not insulate from review actions taken in bad faith and for no legitimate 3 purpose, . . . it requires that neither judge nor jury freely substitute their judgment for that of 4 officials who have made a considered choice.” Whitley, 475 U.S. at 322.

6 The factors relevant to the jury’s inquiry include “the need for the application of force, the 7 relationship between the need and the amount of force that was used, [and] the extent of injury
8 inflicted,” Whitley, 475 U.S. at 321 (quoting Johnson v. Glick, 481 F.2d 1028, 1033 (2d Cir. 1973)).
9 “But equally relevant are such factors as the extent of the threat to the safety of staff and inmates, 10 as reasonably perceived by the responsible officials on the basis of the facts known to them, and 11 any efforts made to temper the severity of a forceful response.” Id. See, e.g., Giles v. Kearney, 12 571 F.3d 318, 326, 328-29 (3d Cir. 2009) (if true, testimony that inmate “was kicked in the ribs 13 and punched in the head while restrained on the ground, after he ceased to resist” established
14 Eighth Amendment violation; however, district court did not commit clear error in finding no 15 excessive force with respect to other aspects of guards’ interactions with the inmate).

17 In assessing the use of force, “the extent of injury suffered by [the] inmate is one factor,” 18 but a plaintiff can establish an Eighth Amendment excessive force claim even without showing
19 “serious injury.” Hudson, 503 U.S. at 7; see also Wilkins v. Gaddy, 130 S. Ct. 1175, 1177, 1178 20 (2010) (per curiam) (rejecting Fourth Circuit’s requirement of “a showing of significant injury in 21 order to state an excessive force claim,” and reiterating “Hudson's direction to decide excessive
22 force claims based on the nature of the force rather than the extent of the injury”). “When prison
23 officials maliciously and sadistically use force to cause harm, contemporary standards of decency
24 always are violated. . . . This is true whether or not significant injury is evident.” Id. at 9.
25 Although “the Eighth Amendment does not protect an inmate against an objectively de minimis 26 use of force, de minimis injuries do not necessarily establish de minimis force.” Smith v.
27 Mensing, 293 F.3d 641, 648-49 (3d Cir. 2002). “[T]he degree of injury is relevant for any Eighth 28 Amendment analysis, [but] there is no fixed minimum quantum of injury that a prisoner must prove ¹⁶² The Third Circuit has held that, in instructing a jury under Hudson and Whitley, it is not error to state that the use of force must “shock the conscience.” See Fuentes, 206 F.3d at 348-49. (Fuentes applied the Hudson and Whitley standard to a prisoner with the constitutional status of a pretrial detainee—a holding apparently overruled by Kingsley—but its teaching about the content of the Hudson and Whitley remains good law.) See Young v. Martin, 801 F.3d 172 (3d Cir. 2015) (resolving issue, left open by Fuentes, whether the use of mechanical restraints should be analyzed under the excessive force line of cases or the conditions of confinement line of cases, by concluding that excessive force analysis is appropriate, and distinguishing Fuentes on the facts). The model instruction does not include the “shocks the conscience” language, because – assuming that “shocks the conscience” describes a standard equivalent to that described in Hudson – the “shocks the conscience” language is redundant.

4.10 Section 1983 – Excessive Force – Convicted Prisoner

1 that he suffered through objective or independent evidence in order to state a claim for wanton and 2 excessive force.” Brooks v. Kyler, 204 F.3d 102, 104 (3d Cir. 2000). “Although the extent of an 3 injury provides a means of assessing the legitimacy and scope of the force, the focus always 4 remains on the force used (the blows).” Id. at 108.

6 In Young v. Martin, 801 F.3d 172 (3d Cir. 2015), the court of appeals held that there was a 7 genuine dispute of material fact as to whether prison guards violated the Eighth Amendment by 8 securing a mentally ill prisoner in a four-point restraint chair, naked, for fourteen hours. The court
9 concluded that a reasonable jury could find that prison officials subjected him to a substantial risk
10 of physical harm and unnecessary pain, given the tightness of the restraints, the length of time
11 restrained, his nakedness, the cold air blowing on him, and his inability to hold his own weight 12 once released.

14 Other sets of model instructions include a requirement that plaintiff suffered harm as a
15 result of the defendant’s use of force. See, e.g., 5th Circuit (Civil) Instruction 10.5; 8th Circuit
16 (Civil) Instruction 4.30; 9th Circuit (Civil) Instruction 11.9; 11th Circuit (Civil) 2.3.1; O’Malley
17 Instruction 166.23; Schwartz & Pratt Instruction 11.01.1. The model also includes this 18 requirement, although there does not appear to be Third Circuit caselaw that specifically addresses
19 whether harm in general (as distinct from physical injury) is an element of an Eighth Amendment
20 excessive force claim.¹⁶³ Assuming that the plaintiff must prove some harm, proof of physical 21 injury clearly suffices. In the light of the Supreme Court’s indication that the Eighth Amendment
22 is designed to protect against torture, see Hudson, 503 U.S. at 9, proof of physical pain or intense 23 fear or emotional pain should also suffice, even absent significant physical injury.¹⁶⁴

25 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(e) provides that “[n]o Federal civil action may be brought by a prisoner
26 confined in a jail, prison, or other correctional facility, for mental or emotional injury suffered 27 while in custody without a prior showing of physical injury.” As noted in the Comment to 28 Instruction 4.8.1, this statute requires a showing of “more-than-de minimis physical injury as a 29 predicate to allegations of emotional injury.” Mitchell v. Horn, 318 F.3d 523, 536 (3d Cir. 2003).

¹⁶³ The instruction given in Douglas v. Owens, 50 F.3d 1226 (3d Cir. 1995), did not include harm as an element. See id. at 1232 n.13. However, the defendants did not request that harm be included as an element, and did not raise the issue on appeal. Thus, the Douglas court may not have had occasion to consider the question.

¹⁶⁴ In Rhodes v. Robinson, 612 F.2d 766, 771-72 (3d Cir. 1979), the plaintiff claimed emotional distress as a result of hearing guards beat another inmate; the court refused to “find Rhodes's claim insufficient because it alleges emotional rather than physical harm,” but held that the claim failed because the plaintiff could not establish “the requisite state of mind” on the part of the defendants.

4.10 Section 1983 – Excessive Force – Convicted Prisoner

1 However, Section 1997e(e) does not preclude the award of nominal and punitive damages. See
2 Allah v. Al-Hafeez, 226 F.3d 247, 252 (3d Cir. 2000). Moreover, it appears that a plaintiff can 3 recover damages for physical pain caused by an Eighth Amendment excessive force violation, 4 without showing physical injury—either because the pain itself counts as physical injury, or because 5 the pain does not count as mental or emotional injury. See Perez v. Jackson, 2000 WL 893445, at 6 *2 (E.D. Pa. June 30, 2000). (Perez, however, was decided prior to Mitchell, and it is unclear
7 whether Perez’s holding accords with the Third Circuit’s requirement of “more-than-de minimis 8 physical injury.”) To the extent that Section 1997e(e) requires some physical injury (other than 9 physical pain) in order to permit recovery of damages for mental or emotional injury, the jury 10 instructions on damages should reflect this requirement.

12 However, not all Eighth Amendment excessive force claims will fall within the scope of 13 Section 1997e(e). “[T]he applicability of the personal injury requirement of 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(e) 14 turns on the plaintiff’s status as a prisoner, not at the time of the incident, but when the lawsuit is 15 filed.” Abdul-Akbar v. McKelvie, 239 F.3d 307, 314 (3d Cir. 2001) (en banc).

17 Some sets of model instructions state explicitly that the jury must give deference to prison
18 officials’ judgments concerning the appropriateness of force in a given situation. See 5th Circuit
19 (Civil) Instruction 10.5; 9th Circuit (Civil) Instruction 11.9; O’Malley Instruction 166.23; Schwartz 20 & Pratt Instruction 11.01.2. However, in Douglas v. Owens, 50 F.3d 1226 (3d Cir. 1995), the 21 district court gave an instruction that omitted any explicit mention of deference, see id. at 1232
22 n.13 (quoting instruction), and the Court of Appeals held the instruction “was proper and adequate 23 under the facts of this case” because the district court’s reference to “force . . . applied in a good 24 faith effort to maintain or restore discipline” indicated to the jury that the defendants should not 25 necessarily be held liable merely because they used force that “is later determined to have been 26 unnecessary,” id. at 1233.¹⁶⁵

¹⁶⁵ In Douglas, the defendants “argue[d] that the charge given by the district court [wa]s inadequate because it fail[ed] to convey the notion that ‘force is not constitutionally “excessive” just because it turns out to have been unnecessary in hindsight.’” Id. at 1233. As noted in the text, the court rejected this contention. The model instruction does state that the plaintiff cannot prove an Eighth Amendment violation “merely by showing that, in hindsight, the amount of force seems unreasonable.” Though the Douglas court held that such language was not required, it did not suggest that the language was inaccurate or misleading.

4 N.B.: This section provides instructions on three particular types of conditions-of-
5 confinement claims – denial of adequate medical care, failure to protect from suicidal actions, and

1 4.11.1 Section 1983 – Conditions of Confinement –
2 Convicted Prisoner –
3 Denial of Adequate Medical Care

5 Model

7 Because inmates must rely on prison authorities to treat their serious medical needs, the 8 government has an obligation to provide necessary medical care to them. In this case, [plaintiff]
9 claims that [defendant] violated the Eighth Amendment to the United States Constitution by 10 showing deliberate indifference to a serious medical need on [plaintiff's] part. Specifically, 11 [plaintiff] claims that [briefly describe plaintiff's allegations].
12

13 In order to establish [his/her] claim for violation of the Eighth Amendment, [plaintiff] must 14 prove each of the following three things by a preponderance of the evidence: 15

16 First: [Plaintiff] had a serious medical need.
17

18 Second: [Defendant] was deliberately indifferent to that serious medical need.
19

20 Third: [Defendant's] deliberate indifference caused [harm] [physical injury]¹⁶⁶ to 21 [plaintiff].
22

23 I will now proceed to give you more details on the first and second of these three requirements.
24

25 First, [plaintiff] must show that [he/she] had a serious medical need. A medical need is 26 serious, for example, when [include any of the following that are warranted by the evidence]:
27

- 28 • A doctor has decided that the condition needs treatment; or
- 29
- 30 • The problem is so obvious that non-doctors would easily recognize the need for medical 31 attention; or
- 32
- 33 • Denying or delaying medical care creates a risk of permanent physical injury; or
- 34
- 35 • Denying or delaying medical care causes needless pain.
36

¹⁶⁶ See Comment for a discussion of whether harm (and physical injury in particular), constitutes an element of this claim.

4.11.1 Section 1983 – Denial of Adequate Medical Care

1 Second, [plaintiff] must show that [defendant] was deliberately indifferent to that serious
2 medical need. [Plaintiff] must show that [defendant] knew of an excessive risk to [plaintiff's]
3 health, and that [defendant] disregarded that risk by failing to take reasonable measures to address 4 it.

6 [Plaintiff] must show that [defendant] actually knew of the risk. If [plaintiff] proves that
7 there was a risk of serious harm to [him/her] and that the risk was obvious, you are entitled to infer
8 from the obviousness of the risk that [defendant] knew of the risk. [However, [defendant] claims
9 that even if there was an obvious risk, [he/she] was unaware of that risk. If you find that 10 [defendant] was unaware of the risk, then you must find that [he/she] was not deliberately 11 indifferent.]¹⁶⁷

13 There are a number of ways in which a plaintiff can show that a defendant was deliberately 14 indifferent, including the following. Deliberate indifference occurs when: [include any of the 15 following examples, or others, that are warranted by the evidence]

- 16 • A prison official denies a reasonable request for medical treatment, and the official knows 17 that the denial exposes the inmate to a substantial risk of pain or permanent injury;
- 18 • A prison official knows that an inmate needs medical treatment, and intentionally refuses 19 to provide that treatment;
- 20 • A prison official knows that an inmate needs medical treatment, and delays the medical 21 treatment for non-medical reasons;
- 22 • A prison official knows that an inmate needs medical treatment, and imposes arbitrary and 23 burdensome procedures that result in delay or denial of the treatment;
- 24 • A prison official knows that an inmate needs medical treatment, and refuses to provide that 25 treatment unless the inmate is willing and able to pay for it;
- 26 • A prison official refuses to let an inmate see a doctor capable of evaluating the need for 27 treatment of an inmate's serious medical need;
- 28 • A prison official persists in a particular course of treatment even though the official knows 29 that the treatment is causing pain and creating a risk of permanent injury.

30
31 32
33 34 35
36
¹⁶⁷ It is unclear who has the burden of proof with respect to a defendant's claim of lack of awareness of an obvious risk. See Comment.

4.11.1 Section 1983 – Denial of Adequate Medical Care

1 [In this case, [plaintiff] was under medical supervision. Thus, to show that [defendant], a 2 non-medical official, was deliberately indifferent, [plaintiff] must show that [defendant] knew that 3 there was reason to believe that the medical staff were mistreating (or not treating) [plaintiff].]

5 [Mere errors in medical judgment do not show deliberate indifference. Thus, a plaintiff
6 cannot prove that a doctor was deliberately indifferent merely by showing that the doctor chose a 7 course of treatment that another doctor disagreed with. [However, a doctor is deliberately 8 indifferent if [he/she] knows what the appropriate treatment is and decides not to provide it for 9 some non-medical reason.] [However, a doctor is deliberately indifferent by arbitrarily interfering 10 with a treatment, if the doctor knows that the treatment has worked for the inmate in the past and 11 that another doctor prescribed that specific course of treatment for the inmate based on a judgment 12 that other treatments would not work or would be harmful.]]
14

15 Comment

16
17 Applicability of the Eighth Amendment standard for denial of adequate medical care. The 18 Eighth Amendment applies only to convicted prisoners,¹⁶⁸ see, e.g., Whitley v. Albers, 475 U.S.
19 312, 318 (1986), and it appears that the Amendment does not apply to a convicted prisoner until 20 after the prisoner has been sentenced, see Graham v. Connor, 490 U.S. 386, 392 n.6 (1989)
21 (dictum).¹⁶⁹ Instruction 4.11 reflects the Eighth Amendment standard concerning the denial of 22 medical care.

24 The Eighth Amendment standard may be more difficult for plaintiffs to meet than the 25 standard that applies to claims regarding treatment of pretrial detainees or of prisoners who have

¹⁶⁸ Betts v. New Castle Youth Development Center, 621 F.3d 249 (3d Cir. 2010), applied Eighth Amendment standards to a claim arising from injuries to a youth who had been “adjudicated delinquent” and “had been committed to ... a maximum security program for serious [juvenile] offenders,” id. at 252, 256 n.8.

¹⁶⁹ Addressing substantive and procedural due process claims arising from placement in restrictive confinement, the Court of Appeals has treated as pretrial detainees two plaintiffs who – during the relevant period – were awaiting resentencing after the vacatur of their death sentences. See Stevenson v. Carroll, 495 F.3d 62, 67 (3d Cir. 2007) (“Although both Stevenson and Manley had been convicted at the time of their complaint, they are classified as pretrial detainees for purposes of our constitutional inquiry.... Their initial sentences had been vacated and they were awaiting resentencing at the time of their complaint and for the duration during which they allege they were subjected to due process violations.... The Warden does not contest the status of the appellants as pretrial detainees for purposes of this appeal.”).

4.11.1 Section 1983 – Denial of Adequate Medical Care

1 been convicted but not yet sentenced. Although “the contours of a state’s due process obligations
2 to [pretrial] detainees with respect to medical care have not been defined by the Supreme 3 Court. . . . , it is clear that detainees are entitled to no less protection than a convicted prisoner is 4 entitled to under the Eighth Amendment.” A.M. v. Luzerne County Juvenile Detention Center, 372
5 F.3d 572, 584 (3d Cir. 2004); see City of Revere v. Massachusetts General Hosp., 463 U.S. 239, 6 244 (1983) (stating that the “due process rights of a person [injured while being apprehended by 7 police] are at least as great as the Eighth Amendment protections available to a convicted 8 prisoner”); County of Sacramento v. Lewis, 523 U.S. 833, 850 (1998) (“Since it may suffice for 9 Eighth Amendment liability that prison officials were deliberately indifferent to the medical needs 10 of their prisoners . . . it follows that such deliberately indifferent conduct must also be enough to 11 satisfy the fault requirement for due process claims based on the medical needs of someone jailed 12 while awaiting trial.”).

14 In Hubbard v. Taylor, a nonmedical conditions-of-confinement case, the Third Circuit held 15 that the district court committed reversible error by analyzing the pretrial detainee plaintiffs’
16 claims under Eighth Amendment standards. Hubbard v. Taylor, 399 F.3d 150, 166-67 (3d Cir.
17 2005). The Hubbard court stressed that while the Eighth Amendment standards have been taken 18 to establish a floor below which treatment of pretrial detainees cannot sink, those standards do not 19 preclude the application of a more protective due process standard to pretrial detainees under Bell
20 v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520 (1979). See Hubbard, 399 F.3d at 165-66. While Hubbard was a 21 nonmedical conditions-of-confinement case, the Hubbard court suggested that its analysis would 22 apply to all conditions-of-confinement cases, including those claiming denial of adequate medical 23 care. See id. at 166 n. 22.¹⁷⁰

¹⁷⁰ On some prior occasions, the Third Circuit has indicated that the standard for pretrial detainees is identical to that for convicted prisoners. See Groman v. Township of Manalapan, 47 F.3d 628, 637 (3d Cir. 1995) (“Failure to provide medical care to a person in custody can rise to the level of a constitutional violation under § 1983 only if that failure rises to the level of deliberate indifference to that person’s serious medical needs.”). In other cases, the court has noted, but not decided, the question whether pretrial detainees should receive more protection (under the Due Process Clauses) than convicted prisoners do under the Eighth Amendment. See, e.g., Kost v. Kozakiewicz, 1 F.3d 176, 188 n.10 (3d Cir. 1993) (“It appears that no determination has as yet been made regarding how much more protection unconvicted prisoners should receive. The appellants, however, have not raised this issue, and therefore we do not address it.”); Natale v. Camden County Correctional Facility, 318 F.3d 575, 581 n.5 (3d Cir. 2003); Woloszyn v. County of Lawrence, 396 F.3d 314, 320 n.5 (3d Cir. 2005) (“[I]n developing our jurisprudence on pre-trial detainees’ suicides we looked to the Eighth Amendment . . . because the due process rights of pre-trial detainees are at least as great as the Eighth Amendment rights of convicted and sentenced prisoners”).

4.11.1 Section 1983 – Denial of Adequate Medical Care

1 Content of the Eighth Amendment standard for denial of adequate medical care. Because 2 inmates “must rely on prison authorities to treat [their] medical needs,” the government has an 3 “obligation to provide medical care for those whom it is punishing by incarceration.” Estelle v.
4 Gamble, 429 U.S. 97, 103 (1976). Eighth Amendment claims concerning denial of adequate 5 medical care constitute a subset of claims concerning prison conditions. In order to prove an 6 Eighth Amendment violation arising from the conditions of confinement, the plaintiff must show
7 that the condition was “sufficiently serious,” Wilson v. Seiter, 501 U.S. 294, 298 (1991), and also 8 that the defendant was “‘deliberate[ly] indifferen[t]’ to inmate health or safety,” Farmer v.
9 Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 834 (1994). Deliberate indifference to the inmate’s serious medical needs 10 violates the Eighth Amendment, “whether the indifference is manifested by prison doctors in their 11 response to the prisoner’s needs or by prison guards in intentionally denying or delaying access to 12 medical care or intentionally interfering with the treatment once prescribed.” Estelle, 429 U.S. at 13 104-05.

15 As noted, in cases regarding medical care, the first (or objective) prong of the Eighth 16 Amendment test requires that the plaintiff show a serious medical need. A medical condition that 17 “has been diagnosed by a physician as requiring treatment” is a serious medical need. Atkinson v.
18 Taylor, 316 F.3d 257, 266 (3d Cir. 2003). So is a medical problem “that is so obvious that a lay 19 person would easily recognize the necessity for a doctor’s attention.” Monmouth County 20 Correctional Institutional Inmates v. Lanzaro, 834 F.2d 326, 347 (3d Cir. 1987) (quoting Pace v.
21 Fauver, 479 F.Supp. 456, 458 (D.N.J.1979), aff’d, 649 F.2d 860 (3d Cir. 1981)). The serious 22 medical need prong is also met in cases where “[n]eedless suffering result[s] from a denial of 23 simple medical care, which does not serve any penological purpose.” Atkinson, 316 F.3d at 266.
24 Likewise, “where denial or delay causes an inmate to suffer a life long handicap or permanent loss,
25 the medical need is considered serious.” Lanzaro, 834 F.2d at 347. Denial of access to potable
26 water for two or three days, especially when the prisoner is menstruating, can constitute an Eight 27 Amendment violation, as can the denial of sanitary napkins and medications for migraines and 28 menstrual cramps. Chavarriaga v. N.J. Dept. of Corr., 806 F.3d 210 (3d Cir. 2015). Cf. Michtavi
29 v. Scism, 808 F.3d 203, 207 (3d Cir. 2015) (“Because there is no authority establishing—let alone 30 ‘clearly’ establishing—a right for prisoners to receive treatment for conditions resulting in 31 impotence and/or infertility, such as retrograde ejaculation or erectile dysfunction, Appellants are 32 entitled to qualified immunity.”).

33
34 As to the second (or subjective) prong of the Eighth Amendment test, mere errors in 35 medical judgment or other negligent behavior do not meet the mens rea requirement. See Estelle, 36 429 U.S. at 107.¹⁷¹ Rather, the plaintiff must show subjective recklessness on the defendant’s part.

¹⁷¹ By contrast, a plaintiff can prove deliberate indifference by showing that a physician knew what the appropriate treatment was and decided not to provide that treatment for a non-medical reason such as cost-cutting. See Durmer v. O’Carroll, 991 F.2d 64, 69 (3d Cir. 1993)

4.11.1 Section 1983 – Denial of Adequate Medical Care

1 “[A] prison official cannot be found liable under the Eighth Amendment for denying an inmate
2 humane conditions of confinement unless the official knows of and disregards an excessive risk to 3 inmate health or safety; the official must both be aware of facts from which the inference could 4 be drawn that a substantial risk of serious harm exists, and he must also draw the inference.”
5 Farmer, 511 U.S. at 837.¹⁷² However, the plaintiff “need not show that a prison official acted or 6 failed to act believing that harm actually would befall an inmate; it is enough that the official acted
7 or failed to act despite his knowledge of a substantial risk of serious harm.” Id. at 842. In sum, “a 8 prison official may be held liable under the Eighth Amendment for denying humane conditions of 9 confinement only if he knows that inmates face a substantial risk of serious harm and disregards
10 that risk by failing to take reasonable measures to abate it.” Id. at 847.

12 The plaintiff can use circumstantial evidence to prove subjective recklessness: The jury is 13 entitled to “conclude that a prison official knew of a substantial risk from the very fact that the risk
14 was obvious.” Id. at 842. However, the jury need not draw that inference; “it remains open to the 15 officials to prove that they were unaware even of an obvious risk to inmate health or safety.” Id.
16 at 844. The defendants “might show, for example, that they did not know of the underlying facts 17 indicating a sufficiently substantial danger and that they were therefore unaware of a danger, or 18 that they knew the underlying facts but believed (albeit unsoundly) that the risk to which the facts
19 gave rise was insubstantial or nonexistent.” *Id.*¹⁷³

(“[I]f the inadequate care was a result of an error in medical judgment on Dr. O’Carroll’s part, Durmer’s claim must fail; but, if the failure to provide adequate care in the form of physical therapy was deliberate, and motivated by non medical factors, then Durmer has a viable claim.”).

Similarly, though “mere disagreements over medical judgment do not state Eighth Amendment claims,” White v. Napoleon, 897 F.2d 103, 110 (3d Cir. 1990), a prison doctor violates the Eighth Amendment when he or she “deliberately and arbitrarily . . . ‘interfer[es] with modalities of treatment prescribed by other physicians, including specialists, even though these modalities of treatment ha[ve] proven satisfactory,’” id. at 111 (quoting amended complaint).

¹⁷³ However, a defendant “would not escape liability if the evidence showed that he merely refused to verify underlying facts that he strongly suspected to be true, or declined to confirm inferences of risk that he strongly suspected to exist.” Id. at 843 n.8.

4.11.1 Section 1983 – Denial of Adequate Medical Care

1 Two bracketed sentences in the model reflect the fact that a defendant will escape liability
2 if the jury finds that even though the risk was obvious, the defendant was unaware of the risk. A 3 footnote appended to those sentences notes some uncertainty concerning the burden of proof on 4 this point. On the one hand, the Farmer Court’s references to defendants “prov[ing]” and 5 “show[ing]” lack of awareness suggest that once a plaintiff proves that a risk was obvious, the 6 defendant then has the burden of proving lack of awareness of that obvious risk. On the other 7 hand, the factual issues concerning the risk’s obviousness and the defendant’s awareness of the 8 risk may be closely entwined, rendering it confusing to present the latter issue as one on which the 9 defendant has the burden of proof. Accordingly, the model does not explicitly address the question 10 of burden of proof concerning that issue.

12 “[E]ven officials who actually knew of a substantial risk to inmate health or safety may be 13 found free from liability if they responded reasonably to the risk, even if the harm ultimately was 14 not averted”; a defendant “who act[ed] reasonably cannot be found liable under the Cruel and 15 Unusual Punishments Clause.” Id. at 844-45.

17 The Third Circuit has enumerated a number of ways in which a plaintiff could show 18 deliberate indifference. Deliberate indifference exists, for example:

- 19
20 • “[w]here prison authorities deny reasonable requests for medical treatment ... and such 21 denial exposes the inmate ‘to undue suffering or the threat of tangible residual injury’”;¹⁷⁴
22
23 • “where ‘knowledge of the need for medical care [is accompanied by the] ... intentional 24 refusal to provide that care’”;¹⁷⁵
25
26 • where “necessary medical treatment [i]s ... delayed for non-medical reasons”;¹⁷⁶

¹⁷⁴ Monmouth County Correctional Inst. Inmates v. Lanzaro, 834 F.2d 326, 346 (3d Cir. 1987) (quoting Westlake v. Lucas, 537 F.2d 857, 860 (6th Cir.1976)).

¹⁷⁵ Id. (quoting Ancata v. Prison Health Servs., 769 F.2d 700, 704 (11th Cir.1985)).

4.11.1 Section 1983 – Denial of Adequate Medical Care

- 1 • “where prison officials erect arbitrary and burdensome procedures that ‘result[] in 2 interminable delays and outright denials of medical care to suffering inmates’”;¹⁷⁷
- 4 • where prison officials “condition provision of needed medical services on the inmate’s 5 ability or willingness to pay”;¹⁷⁸
- 7 • where prison officials “deny access to [a] physician capable of evaluating the need for ...
8 treatment” of a serious medical need;¹⁷⁹
- 10 • “where the prison official persists in a particular course of treatment ‘in the face of resultant 11 pain and risk of permanent injury.’”¹⁸⁰

13 When a prisoner is under medical supervision, “absent a reason to believe (or actual knowledge) 14 that prison doctors or their assistants are mistreating (or not treating) a prisoner, a non-medical 15 prison official ... will not be chargeable with the Eighth Amendment scienter requirement of 16 deliberate indifference.” Spruill v. Gillis, 372 F.3d 218, 236 (3d Cir. 2004).

18 Other sets of model instructions include, as an element of the claim, that the defendant’s
19 deliberate indifference to the plaintiff’s serious medical need caused harm to the plaintiff. See,
20 e.g., 5th Circuit (Civil) Instruction 10.6; 8th Circuit (Civil) Instruction 4.31; 9th Circuit (Civil) 21 Instruction 11.11. It is somewhat difficult to discern from the caselaw whether harm is a distinct 22 element of an Eighth Amendment denial-of-medical-care claim, because courts often discuss harm
23 (or the prospect of harm) in assessing whether the plaintiff showed a serious medical need.¹⁸¹

¹⁷⁸ Id.; compare Reynolds v. Wagner, 128 F.3d 166, 174 (3d Cir. 1997) (rejecting “the plaintiffs’ argument that charging inmates for medical care is per se unconstitutional”).

¹⁷⁹ Lanzaro, 834 F.2d at 347 (quoting Inmates of Allegheny County Jail v. Pierce, 612 F.2d 754, 762 (3d Cir.1979)).

¹⁸⁰ Rouse v. Plantier, 182 F.3d 192, 197 (3d Cir. 1999) (quoting White v. Napoleon, 897 F.2d 103, 109 (3d Cir. 1990)).

¹⁸¹ For example, the court in Brooks v. Kyler, 204 F.3d 102 (3d Cir. 2000) rejected a

4.11.1 Section 1983 – Denial of Adequate Medical Care

1 Assuming that the plaintiff must prove some harm, proof of physical injury clearly suffices. Proof
2 of physical pain should also suffice, even absent other significant physical injury. Cf. Atkinson,
3 316 F.3d at 266 (“Needless suffering resulting from a denial of simple medical care, which does 4 not serve any penological purpose, is inconsistent with contemporary standards of decency and 5 thus violates the Eighth Amendment.”). It is less clear whether emotional distress resulting from 6 an increased risk of future physical injury gives rise to a damages claim for denial of medical care.

8 Addressing a claim for injunctive relief, the Supreme Court has held that “the Eighth 9 Amendment protects against future harm to inmates.” Helling v. McKinney, 509 U.S. 25, 33
10 (1993). In Helling, the Court held that the plaintiff validly stated a claim “by alleging that 11 petitioners have, with deliberate indifference, exposed him to levels of [environmental tobacco
12 smoke] that pose an unreasonable risk of serious damage to his future health.” Id. at 35. The Third 13 Circuit, however, has held that “the Helling Court's reasoning concerning injunctive relief does 14 not translate to a claim for monetary relief.” Fontrou v. Owens, 150 F.3d 239, 243 (3d Cir. 1998).
15 Fontrou addressed whether an inmate “can recover damages ... for emotional distress allegedly 16 caused by his exposure to asbestos, even though he presently manifests no physical injury.” Id. at 17 240. Reasoning that “[i]n a conditions of confinement case, ‘extreme deprivations are required to 18 make out a . . . claim[,]’” id. at 244 (quoting Hudson, 503 U.S. at 9), the Third Circuit held that 19 “[f]ederal law does not provide inmates, who suffer no present physical injury, a cause of action 20 for damages for emotional distress allegedly caused by exposure to asbestos,” id. More recently, 21 however, a different Third Circuit panel seemed to depart from Fontrou in a case involving an 22 inmate’s claim regarding a risk of future injury from environmental tobacco smoke (ETS). In 23 Atkinson v. Taylor, 316 F.3d 257, 259-60, 262 (3d Cir. 2003), the plaintiff alleged both current 24 physical symptoms and a risk of future harm from exposure to ETS. The Atkinson court 25 distinguished the plaintiff’s claim concerning future harm from the claim concerning present medical-needs claim based on the following reasoning:

Although a deliberate failure to provide medical treatment motivated by non-medical factors can present a constitutional claim, . . . in this case, it is uncontroverted that a nurse passing out medications looked at Brooks's injuries within minutes of the alleged beating, and that Brooks was treated by prison medical staff on the same day. Moreover, he presented no evidence of any harm resulting from a delay in medical treatment. See Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 9 (1992) (“Because society does not expect that prisoners will have unqualified access to health care, deliberate indifference to medical needs amounts to an Eighth Amendment violation only if those needs are serious.”).

Id. at 105 n.4; see also Lanzaro, 834 F.2d at 347 (“The seriousness of an inmate's medical need may also be determined by reference to the effect of denying the particular treatment.”).

4.11.1 Section 1983 – Denial of Adequate Medical Care

1 physical injury, and analyzed each separately. See id. at 262. The panel majority held that the 2 defendants were not entitled to qualified immunity on the plaintiff’s future injury claim. See id. at 3 264. In a footnote, the panel majority stated:

5 If appellee can produce evidence of future harm, he may be able to recover monetary 6 damages. See Fontroy, 150 F.3d at 244. However, the problematic quantification of those 7 future damages is not relevant to the present inquiry concerning whether the underlying 8 constitutional right was clearly established so that a reasonable prison official would know 9 that he subjected appellee to the risk of future harm. Moreover, even if appellee is unable 10 to establish a right to compensatory damages, he may be entitled to nominal damages.

12 Id. at 265 n.6. While the cited passage from Fontroy held that damages are not available for such 13 future injury claims, the Atkinson majority seemed to suggest that such damages are available 14 (though they may be difficult to quantify), and that in any event nominal damages might be 15 available.¹⁸²

17 The Supreme Court’s more recent decision in Erickson v. Pardus, 127 S. Ct. 2197 (2007)
18 (per curiam), may provide additional support for the notion that some damages claims for future
19 harm are cognizable. In Erickson, the plaintiff sued for damages and injunctive relief after prison 20 officials terminated his treatment program for a liver condition resulting from hepatitis C. The 21 court of appeals affirmed the dismissal of the complaint, reasoning that the complaint failed to 22 allege a “cognizable ... harm” resulting from the termination of the treatment program. Erickson,
23 127 S. Ct. at 2199. The Supreme Court vacated and remanded, holding that the plaintiff 24 sufficiently alleged harm by asserting that the interruption of his treatment program threatened his 25 life. See id. at 2200.¹⁸³

¹⁸² Atkinson accords with a pre-Helling case, White v. Napoleon, 897 F.2d 103 (3d Cir. 1990), in which one of the plaintiffs alleged that a prison doctor’s “sadistic and deliberate indifference to his serious medical needs . . . caused him needless anxiety . . . and intentionally and needlessly put him at a substantially increased risk of peptic ulcer,” id. at 108. Though the plaintiff had not alleged that his physical condition actually worsened as a result of the doctor’s conduct, the court held that he had stated an Eighth Amendment claim. In so ruling, the court stated that it was “not prepared to hold that inflicting mental anxiety alone cannot constitute cruel and unusual punishment.” Id. at 111. The plaintiffs in White sought both injunctive and monetary relief, and the court did not resolve whether the plaintiff who suffered mental anxiety and increased risk of future harm (but no present physical injury) could obtain damages. See id. at 111 (“What damages, if any, flow from the alleged conduct is an issue for later proceedings.”).

¹⁸³ The Court explained: “The complaint stated that Dr. Bloor’s decision to remove petitioner from his prescribed hepatitis C medication was ‘endangering [his] life.’... It alleged

4.11.1 Section 1983 – Denial of Adequate Medical Care

1 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(e) provides that “[n]o Federal civil action may be brought by a prisoner
2 confined in a jail, prison, or other correctional facility, for mental or emotional injury suffered
3 while in custody without a prior showing of physical injury.” For discussion of this limitation, see
4 the Comments to Instructions 4.8.1 and 4.10. To the extent that Section 1997e(e) requires some
5 physical injury (other than physical pain) in order to permit recovery of damages for mental or 6 emotional injury, the jury instructions on damages should reflect this requirement. However, not 7 all Eighth Amendment denial-of-medical-care claims fall within the scope of Section 1997e(e).
8 “[T]he applicability of the personal injury requirement of 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(e) turns on the 9 plaintiff’s status as a prisoner, not at the time of the incident, but when the lawsuit is filed.”

this medication was withheld ‘shortly after’ petitioner had commenced a treatment program that would take one year, that he was ‘still in need of treatment for this disease,’ and that the prison officials were in the meantime refusing to provide treatment.... This alone was enough to satisfy Rule 8(a)(2).” Id.

7 Because inmates must rely on prison authorities to treat their serious medical needs, the 8 government has an obligation to provide necessary medical care to them. If an inmate is 9 particularly vulnerable to suicide, that is a serious medical need. In this case, [plaintiff] claims
10 that [decedent] was particularly vulnerable to suicide and that [defendant] violated the Eighth 11 Amendment to the United States Constitution by showing deliberate indifference to that 12 vulnerability.
13

14 In order to establish [his/her] claim for violation of the Eighth Amendment, [plaintiff] must 15 prove the following three things by a preponderance of the evidence:
16

17 First: [Decedent] was particularly vulnerable to suicide. [Plaintiff] must show that there 18 was a strong likelihood that [decedent] would attempt suicide.
19

20 Second: [Defendant] was deliberately indifferent to that vulnerability.
21

22 Third: [Decedent] [would have survived] [would have suffered less harm] if [defendant]
23 had not been deliberately indifferent.
24

25 I will now give you more details on the second of these three elements. To show that 26 [defendant] was deliberately indifferent, [plaintiff] must show that [defendant] knew that there was 27 a strong likelihood that [decedent] would attempt suicide, and that [defendant] disregarded that 28 risk by failing to take reasonable measures to address it.
29

30 [Plaintiff] must show that [defendant] actually knew of the risk. [If a prison official knew 31 of facts that [he/she] strongly suspected to be true, and those facts indicated a substantial risk of 32 serious harm to an inmate, the official cannot escape liability merely because [he/she] refused to 33 take the opportunity to confirm those facts. But keep in mind that mere carelessness or negligence
34 is not enough to make an official liable. It is not enough for [plaintiff] to show that a reasonable 35 person would have known, or that [defendant] should have known, of the risk to [plaintiff].
36 [Plaintiff] must show that [defendant] actually knew of the risk.]
37

38 If [plaintiff] proves that the risk of a suicide attempt by [decedent] was obvious, you are 39 entitled to infer from the obviousness of the risk that [defendant] knew of the risk. [However,
40 [defendant] claims that even if there was an obvious risk, [he/she] was unaware of that risk. If you

4.11.2 Section 1983 – Failure to Protect from Suicidal Action

1 find that [defendant] was unaware of the risk, then you must find that [he/she] was not deliberately
2 indifferent.]¹⁸⁴

7 A Section 1983 claim arising from a prisoner’s suicide (or attempted suicide) falls within 8 the general category of claims concerning denial of medical care. See, e.g., Woloszyn v. County
9 of Lawrence, 396 F.3d 314, 320 (3d Cir. 2005) (“A particular vulnerability to suicide represents a 10 serious medical need.”). For an overview of the Eighth Amendment standard for denial of 11 adequate medical care, see Comment 4.11.1, supra. A specific instruction is provided here for 12 suicide cases because the Court of Appeals has articulated a distinct framework for analyzing such 13 claims.

15 Vulnerability to suicide. The plaintiff must show that the decedent “had a ‘particular 16 vulnerability to suicide.’” Woloszyn, 396 F.3d at 319 (quoting Colburn v. Upper Darby Township, 17 946 F.2d 1017, 1023 (3d Cir. 1991)). “[T]here must be a strong likelihood, rather than a mere 18 possibility, that self-inflicted harm will occur.” Woloszyn, 396 F.3d at 320 (quoting Colburn, 946
19 F.2d at 1024).
20

21 Deliberate indifference. The plaintiff in a case involving a convicted prisoner’s suicide 22 must meet the Farmer test for subjective deliberate indifference. Admittedly, in the context of 23 claims concerning pretrial detainees’ suicides, the Court of Appeals stated an objective, rather than 24 a subjective, test: “[A] plaintiff in a prison suicide case has the burden of establishing three 25 elements: (1) the detainee had a ‘particular vulnerability to suicide,’ (2) the custodial officer or 26 officers knew or should have known of that vulnerability, and (3) those officers ‘acted with 27 reckless indifference’ to the detainee’s particular vulnerability.” Woloszyn, 396 F.3d at 319
28 (quoting Colburn, 946 F.2d at 1023). However, claims regarding convicted prisoners sound in the 29 Eighth Amendment, and plaintiffs in such cases must show subjective deliberate indifference. See 30 Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 837 (1994); Singletary v. Pennsylvania Dept. of Corrections, 31 266 F.3d 186, 192 n.2 (3d Cir. 2001) (applying Farmer in case arising from convicted prisoner’s 32 suicide); see also Comments 4.11.1 & 4.11.3. The model instruction is designed for use in Eighth 33 Amendment cases and it employs the Farmer standard.
34

35 Claims regarding pretrial detainees are substantive due process claims, and it is not clear
36 whether such claims should be analyzed under Farmer’s stringent Eighth Amendment test. See 37 Comment 4.11.1 (noting that the substantive due process test for claims concerning treatment of ¹⁸⁴ It is unclear who has the burden of proof with respect to a defendant’s claim of lack of awareness of an obvious risk. See Comment 4.11.1.

4.11.2 Section 1983 – Failure to Protect from Suicidal Action

1 pretrial detainees may be less rigorous than the Eighth Amendment test for claims concerning
2 treatment of convicted prisoners); see also Owens v. City of Philadelphia, 6 F. Supp. 2d 373, 380
3 n.6 (E.D.Pa. 1998) (“The Eighth Amendment’s cruel and unusual punishments clause – which 4 underpins the subjective ‘criminal recklessness’ standard articulated in Farmer – seems rather 5 remote from the values appropriate for determining the due process rights of those who, although 6 in detention, have not been convicted of any crime.”). Because the plaintiff in Woloszyn failed to 7 present evidence establishing the first element (particular vulnerability to suicide), the Court of 8 Appeals did not have occasion to decide whether Farmer’s subjective deliberate indifference test
9 should apply to claims concerning pretrial detainees’ suicides. See Woloszyn, 396 F.3d at 321.¹⁸⁵

11 Under the Farmer deliberate indifference standard, even “officials who actually knew of a 12 substantial risk to inmate health or safety may be found free from liability if they responded 13 reasonably to the risk, even if the harm ultimately was not averted.” Farmer, 511 U.S. at 844.

14
15 Causation. Although the standard stated in Woloszyn does not explicitly include an element 16 of causation, district court opinions have applied a causation test. See, e.g., Foster v. City of 17 Philadelphia, 2004 WL 225041, at *7 (E.D.Pa. 2004) (“[B]ecause Massey’s failure to act 18 consistent with Police Department Directives on High-Risk Suicide Detainees (requiring 19 communication of suicidal tendencies to the supervisor and all other police officials coming into 20 contact with the detainee) could be found to be found to be a factor contributing to Foster’s suicide
21 attempt, Plaintiff has made the requisite causal nexus.”); id. at *8 (“Because a reasonable jury
22 could find that Foster’s suicide attempt could have been prevented had Moore monitored Foster
23 more closely, Plaintiff has made the requisite causal nexus.”); Owens, 6 F. Supp. 2d at 382-83 24 (“Because the omissions complained of could be found to have been among the factors resulting 25 in the non-deliverance of the pass [to see a psychiatrist] at a time contemporaneous to the last ¹⁸⁵ In a non-precedential opinion, the Court of Appeals had cited the Farmer subjective deliberate indifference standard while affirming the dismissal of a claim concerning a pretrial detainee’s suicide attempt. See Serafin v. City of Johnstown, 53 Fed.Appx. 211, *214 (3d Cir. 2002) (non-precedential opinion); compare id. n.2 (noting that “[t]he due process rights of pretrial detainees are at least as great as those of a convicted prisoner”). In a more recent non-precedential opinion, the Court of Appeals cited pre-Farmer caselaw for the proposition that pretrial detainee suicide claims require a showing of “reckless indifference,” Schuenemann v. U.S., 2006 WL 408404, at *2 (3d Cir. Feb. 23, 2006) (non-precedential opinion) (quoting Colburn v. Upper Darby Twp., 946 F.2d 1017, 1024 (3d Cir. 1991)), but then stated that Woloszyn “suggested that [the reckless indifference standard] is similar to the ‘deliberate indifference’ standard applied to a claim brought under the Eighth Amendment,” Schuenemann, 2006 WL 408404, at *2 (citing Woloszyn, 396 F.3d at 321).

4.11.2 Section 1983 – Failure to Protect from Suicidal Action

1 sighting of Gaudreau alive, plaintiffs have made a showing of the requisite causal nexus.”).
2 Including the element of causation seems appropriate; as the Court of Appeals stated regarding 3 claims of failure to protect from attack, “to survive summary judgment on an Eighth Amendment
4 claim asserted under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, a plaintiff is required to produce sufficient evidence of (1)
5 a substantial risk of serious harm; (2) the defendants' deliberate indifference to that risk; and (3)

8 Liability of supervisory officials. A prison administrator can be held liable for his own 9 deliberate indifference to the risk of suicide even if he has no specific knowledge of any particular 10 inmate, because a “high-ranking prison official can expose an inmate to danger by failing to correct 11 serious known deficiencies in the provision of medical care to the inmate population.” Barkes v.
12 First Correctional Medical, 766 F.3d 307, 324 (3d Cir. 2014), rev'd on other grounds, 135 S. Ct.
13 2042, 2043 (2015). There was evidence in Barkes that “serious deficiencies in the provision of 14 medical care by a private, third-party provided resulted in an inmate’s suicide,” id. at 310, that 15 prison officials “were aware of an unreasonable risk that [the contractor’s] declining performance 16 would result in a failure to treat or a mistreatment of an inmate's serious medical condition,” and 17 that by failing to enforce compliance with the standards required by their contract, the prison 18 officials “were deliberately indifferent to the risk that [the contractor’s] flagging quality would 19 result in a violation of an inmate's constitutional rights.” Id. at 331. See also Comment 4.6.1
20 (discussing supervisory liability). When the Supreme Court reversed on the issue of qualified 21 immunity, it did not reach the merits of the constitutional claim itself. Taylor v. Barkes, 135 S. Ct.
22 2042, 2043 (2015). It did, however, express some skepticism, noting that “the weight of authority
23 at the time of Barkes’s death suggested that such a right did not exist.” Id. at 2044-45 (citing cases 24 from the Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, and Eleventh Circuits).

7 Prison officials have a duty to protect inmates from violence at the hands of other prisoners.
8 In this case, [plaintiff] claims that [defendant] violated the Eighth Amendment to the United States
9 Constitution by showing deliberate indifference to a substantial risk of serious harm to [[plaintiff]
10 or [decendent]].¹⁸⁶ Specifically, [plaintiff] claims that [briefly describe plaintiff’s allegations].
11

12 In order to establish [his/her] claim for violation of the Eighth Amendment, [plaintiff] must 13 prove each of the following three things by a preponderance of the evidence:
14

15 First: There was a substantial risk of serious harm to [plaintiff] – namely, a substantial risk 16 that [plaintiff] would be attacked by another inmate.
17

18 Second: [Defendant] was deliberately indifferent to that risk.
19

20 Third: [Plaintiff] [would have survived] [would have suffered less harm]¹⁸⁷ if [defendant]
21 had not been deliberately indifferent.
22

23 I will now proceed to give you more details on the second of these three requirements. To 24 show deliberate indifference, [plaintiff] must show that [defendant] knew of a substantial risk that 25 [plaintiff] would be attacked, and that [defendant] disregarded that risk by failing to take 26 reasonable measures to deal with it.
27

28 [Plaintiff] must show that [defendant] actually knew of the risk. [Plaintiff need not prove 29 that [defendant] knew precisely which inmate would attack [plaintiff], so long as [plaintiff] shows 30 that [defendant] knew there was an obvious, substantial risk to [plaintiff’s] safety.]
31

32 [If a prison official knew of facts that [he/she] strongly suspected to be true, and those facts 33 indicated a substantial risk of serious harm to an inmate, the official cannot escape liability merely

¹⁸⁶ If the plaintiff’s claim concerns a fatal attack on an inmate, the name of the decedent (rather than the plaintiff’s name) should be inserted in appropriate places in this instruction.

¹⁸⁷ For a discussion of whether physical injury is an element of this claim, see the Comment to this Instruction, below, and the Comments to Instructions 4.8.1 and 4.10.

4.11.3 Section 1983 – Failure to Protect from Attack

1 because [he/she] refused to take the opportunity to confirm those facts. But keep in mind that mere
2 carelessness or negligence is not enough to make an official liable. It is not enough for [plaintiff]
3 to show that a reasonable person would have known, or that [defendant] should have known, of 4 the risk to [plaintiff]. [Plaintiff] must show that [defendant] actually knew of the risk.]

6 If [plaintiff] proves that there was a risk of serious harm to [him/her] and that the risk was 7 obvious, you are entitled to infer from the obviousness of the risk that [defendant] knew of the 8 risk. [However, [defendant] claims that even if there was an obvious risk, [he/she] was unaware 9 of that risk. If you find that [defendant] was unaware of the risk, then you must find that [he/she] 10 was not deliberately indifferent.]¹⁸⁸

15 Applicability of the Eighth Amendment standard for failure to protect from attack. As 16 noted above (see Comment 4.11.1), the Eighth Amendment applies to claims by convicted
17 prisoners. Failure-to-protect claims by arrestees or pretrial detainees proceed under a substantive 18 due process theory, and prior decisions by the court of appeals indicated that the standard for 19 arrestees or pretrial detainees is at least as protective as the Eighth Amendment standard.¹⁸⁹ Most 20 recently, the court of appeals has stated simply, “This Court has applied the same standard to a 21 failure-to-prevent claim under the Fourteenth Amendment as under the Eighth Amendment.”
22 Thomas v. Cumberland County, 749 F.3d 217, 223 n.4 (3d Cir. 2014).
23

24 Content of the Eighth Amendment standard for failure to protect from attack.
25 “[P]rison officials have a duty ... to protect prisoners from violence at the hands of other 26 prisoners.” Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 833 (1994) (quoting Cortes-Quinones v.

¹⁸⁸ It is unclear who has the burden of proof with respect to a defendant’s claim of lack of awareness of an obvious risk. See Comment 4.11.1.

1 Jimenez-Nettleship, 842 F.2d 556, 558 (1st Cir. 1988)).¹⁹⁰ “Being violently assaulted in prison is
2 simply not ‘part of the penalty that criminal offenders pay for their offenses against society.’” Id.
3 at 834 (quoting Rhodes v. Chapman, 452 U.S. 337, 347 (1981)).

5 Eighth Amendment claims concerning failure to protect from attack constitute a subset of 6 claims concerning prison conditions. In order to prove an Eighth Amendment violation arising 7 from the conditions of confinement, the plaintiff must show that the condition was “sufficiently 8 serious,” Wilson v. Seiter, 501 U.S. 294, 298 (1991), and also that the defendant was 9 “‘deliberate[ly] indifferen[t]’ to inmate health or safety,” Farmer, 511 U.S. at 834. The plaintiff 10 must also show causation. See Hamilton v. Leavy, 117 F.3d 742, 746 (3d Cir. 1997).

12 First element: substantial risk of serious harm. The first (or objective) prong of the Eighth 13 Amendment test requires that the plaintiff show “that he is incarcerated under conditions posing a 14 substantial risk of serious harm.” Farmer, 511 U.S. at 834; Shelton v. Bledsoe, 775 F.3d 554, 564-15 65 (3d Cir. 2015) (emphasizing that “the Eighth Amendment . . . protects against the risk—not 16 merely the manifestation—of harm”).
17

18 Second element: deliberate indifference. Regarding the second (or subjective) prong of the 19 Eighth Amendment test, the plaintiff must show subjective recklessness on the defendant’s part.
20 “[A] prison official cannot be found liable under the Eighth Amendment for denying an inmate
21 humane conditions of confinement unless the official knows of and disregards an excessive risk to 22 inmate health or safety; the official must both be aware of facts from which the inference could be 23 drawn that a substantial risk of serious harm exists, and he must also draw the inference.” Id. at 24 837.¹⁹¹ However, the plaintiff “need not show that a prison official acted or failed to act believing 25 that harm actually would befall an inmate; it is enough that the official acted or failed to act despite 26 his knowledge of a substantial risk of serious harm.” Id. at 842. In sum, “a prison official may be 27 held liable under the Eighth Amendment for denying humane conditions of confinement only if

¹⁹⁰ “Having incarcerated ‘persons [with] demonstrated proclivit[ies] for antisocial criminal, and often violent, conduct,’ ... having stripped them of virtually every means of self-protection and foreclosed their access to outside aid, the government and its officials are not free to let the state of nature take its course.” Farmer, 511 U.S. at 833 (quoting Hudson v. Palmer, 468 U.S. 517, 526 (1984)).

¹⁹¹ The subjective “deliberate indifference” standard for Eighth Amendment conditions of confinement claims is distinct from the objective “deliberate indifference” standard for municipal liability through inadequate training, supervision or screening. See Farmer, 511 U.S. at 840-41 (distinguishing City of Canton v. Harris, 489 U.S. 378 (1989)); Comment 4.6.7 & Comment 4.6.8, supra.

4.11.3 Section 1983 – Failure to Protect from Attack

1 he knows that inmates face a substantial risk of serious harm and disregards that risk by failing to 2 take reasonable measures to abate it.” Id. at 847.

4 The plaintiff can use circumstantial evidence to prove subjective recklessness: The jury is
5 entitled to “conclude that a prison official knew of a substantial risk from the very fact that the risk
6 was obvious.” Id. at 842.¹⁹² For example, if the “plaintiff presents evidence showing that a 7 substantial risk of inmate attacks was ‘longstanding, pervasive, well-documented, or expressly 8 noted by prison officials in the past, and the circumstances suggest that the defendant-official being 9 sued had been exposed to information concerning the risk and thus “must have known” about it,
10 then such evidence could be sufficient to permit a trier of fact to find that the defendant-official
11 had actual knowledge of the risk.’” Id. at 842-43 (quoting respondents’ brief).¹⁹³

13 Even if the plaintiff does present circumstantial evidence supporting an inference of 14 subjective recklessness, “it remains open to the officials to prove that they were unaware even of 15 an obvious risk to inmate health or safety.” Id. at 844. The defendants “might show, for example, 16 that they did not know of the underlying facts indicating a sufficiently substantial danger and that 17 they were therefore unaware of a danger, or that they knew the underlying facts but believed (albeit 18 unsoundly) that the risk to which the facts gave rise was insubstantial or nonexistent.” Id.

20 However, a defendant “would not escape liability if the evidence showed that he merely 21 refused to verify underlying facts that he strongly suspected to be true, or declined to confirm 22 inferences of risk that he strongly suspected to exist (as when a prison official is aware of a high 23 probability of facts indicating that one prisoner has planned an attack on another but resists
24 opportunities to obtain final confirmation . . .).” Id. at 843 n.8.¹⁹⁴

¹⁹³ See also Hamilton v. Leavy, 117 F.3d 742, 748 (3d Cir. 1997) (holding that such evidence precluded summary judgment for defendant). As the Court of Appeals has stated the standard, “using circumstantial evidence to prove deliberate indifference requires more than evidence that the defendants should have recognized the excessive risk and responded to it; it requires evidence that the defendant must have recognized the excessive risk and ignored it.” Beers-Capitol v. Whetzel, 256 F.3d 120, 138 (3d Cir. 2001).

¹⁹⁴ After noting this issue, the Court continued: “When instructing juries in deliberate indifference cases with such issues of proof, courts should be careful to ensure that the requirement of subjective culpability is not lost. It is not enough merely to find that a reasonable person would have known, or that the defendant should have known, and juries

1 Likewise, it is not a valid defense “that, while [the defendant] was aware of an obvious,
2 substantial risk to inmate safety, he did not know that the complainant was especially likely to be
3 assaulted by the specific prisoner who eventually committed the assault.” Id. at 843. As the Court 4 explained, “it does not matter whether the risk comes from a single source or multiple sources, any 5 more than it matters whether a prisoner faces an excessive risk of attack for reasons personal to 6 him or because all prisoners in his situation face such a risk.” Id.

8 Even “officials who actually knew of a substantial risk to inmate health or safety may be 9 found free from liability if they responded reasonably to the risk, even if the harm ultimately was 10 not averted”; a defendant “who act[ed] reasonably cannot be found liable under the Cruel and 11 Unusual Punishments Clause.” Id. at 844-45.¹⁹⁵
12

13 Third element: causation. As noted above, the plaintiff must show causation. See 14 Hamilton, 117 F.3d at 746 (“[T]o survive summary judgment on an Eighth Amendment claim
15 asserted under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, a plaintiff is required to produce sufficient evidence of (1) a 16 substantial risk of serious harm; (2) the defendants' deliberate indifference to that risk; and (3) 17 causation.”).

19 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(e) provides that “[n]o Federal civil action may be brought by a prisoner
20 confined in a jail, prison, or other correctional facility, for mental or emotional injury suffered
21 while in custody without a prior showing of physical injury.” For discussion of this limitation, see
22 the Comments to Instructions 4.8.1 and 4.10. To the extent that Section 1997e(e) requires some 23 physical injury (other than physical pain) in order to permit recovery of damages for mental or should be instructed accordingly.” Farmer, 511 U.S. at 843 n.8.

¹⁹⁵ See also Beers-Capitol, 256 F.3d at 133 (“[A] defendant can rebut a prima facie demonstration of deliberate indifference either by establishing that he did not have the requisite level of knowledge or awareness of the risk, or that, although he did know of the risk, he took reasonable steps to prevent the harm from occurring.”).

Even if a defendant initially makes a recommendation that constitutes a reasonable response to the risk to the inmate, the defendant may be liable if she fails to take additional reasonable steps when that recommendation is rejected. For example, in Hamilton v. Leavy, the Court of Appeals held that the reasonableness of a prison “Multi-Disciplinary Team” (MDT)’s initial recommendation of protective custody did not warrant the grant of summary judgment in favor of the MDT members, because “while it appears that the MDT defendants acted reasonably in following the internal prison procedures by recommending to the CICC that Hamilton be placed in protective custody, the reasonableness of their actions following the rejection of that recommendation remains a question.” Hamilton, 117 F.3d at 748.

4.11.3 Section 1983 – Failure to Protect from Attack

1 emotional injury, the jury instructions on damages should reflect this requirement. However, not
2 all Eighth Amendment claims fall within the scope of Section 1997e(e). “[T]he applicability of 3 the personal injury requirement of 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(e) turns on the plaintiff’s status as a prisoner,
4 not at the time of the incident, but when the lawsuit is filed.” Abdul-Akbar v. McKelvie, 239 F.3d
5 307, 314 (3d Cir. 2001) (en banc).

4.12 Section 1983 – Unlawful Seizure

1 Instruction 4.12 sets forth the opening paragraphs of an instruction on Fourth Amendment
2 unlawful seizure, and this Comment addresses a number of issues that may be relevant to such an 3 instruction. Instructions 4.12.1 - 4.12.3 provide more specific language that can be added to the 4 instruction as appropriate.

6 The Court of Appeals has set forth “a three-step process” for assessing Fourth Amendment
7 false arrest claims: First, the plaintiff must show that he or she “was seized for Fourth Amendment
8 purposes”; second, the plaintiff must show that this seizure was “unreasonable” under the Fourth 9 Amendment; and third, the plaintiff must show that the defendant in question should be held liable
10 for the violation. Berg, 219 F.3d at 269.¹⁹⁶
11

12 Types of “seizures.” Obviously, an arrest constitutes a seizure; but measures short of 13 arrest also count as seizures for Fourth Amendment purposes. “[W]henver a police officer accosts 14 an individual and restrains his freedom to walk away, he has ‘seized’ that person.” Terry v. Ohio, 15 392 U.S. 1, 16 (1968); see also id. at 19 n.16 (seizure occurs “when the officer, by means of 16 physical force or show of authority, has in some way restrained the liberty of a citizen”).¹⁹⁷ For

¹⁹⁶ As to the third step of this test, the simplest case is presented by a defendant who intentionally seized the plaintiff. Such a defendant should be held liable if the seizure was unreasonable and the defendant lacks qualified immunity.

A more complicated question arises when a defendant intends that another person be seized, but a fellow officer, acting on that defendant’s directions, seizes the plaintiff instead. The Court of Appeals has suggested that a claim may be stated against such a defendant if the plaintiff can show deliberate indifference. See Berg, 219 F.3d at 274 (“Where a defendant does not intentionally cause the plaintiff to be seized, but is nonetheless responsible for the seizure, it may be that a due process ‘deliberate indifference’ rather than a Fourth Amendment analysis is appropriate.”).

This Comment focuses on the first two steps of the inquiry – seizure and unreasonableness.

¹⁹⁷ “[A] Fourth Amendment seizure . . . [occurs] only when there is a governmental termination of freedom of movement through means intentionally applied.” Brower v. County of Inyo, 489 U.S. 593, 596-97 (1989) (emphasis in original). “A seizure occurs even when an unintended person is the object of detention, so long as the means of detention are intentionally applied to that person.” Berg, 219 F.3d at 269. “For example, if a police officer fires his gun at a fleeing robbery suspect and the bullet inadvertently strikes an innocent bystander, there has been no Fourth Amendment seizure. . . . If, on the other hand, the officer fires his gun directly at the innocent bystander in the mistaken belief that the bystander is the robber, then a Fourth

1 instance, “[t]emporary detention of individuals during the stop of an automobile by the police,
2 even if only for a brief period and for a limited purpose, constitutes a ‘seizure’” Whren v.
3 United States, 517 U.S. 806, 809 (1996).¹⁹⁸ “A seizure does not occur every time a police officer
4 approaches someone to ask a few questions. Such consensual encounters are important tools of 5 law enforcement and need not be based on any suspicion of wrongdoing.” Johnson v. Campbell,
6 332 F.3d 199, 205 (3d Cir. 2003). However, “an initially consensual encounter between a police
7 officer and a citizen can be transformed into a seizure or detention within the meaning of the Fourth
8 Amendment, ‘if, in view of all the circumstances surrounding the incident, a reasonable person
9 would have believed that he was not free to leave.’” I.N.S. v. Delgado, 466 U.S. 210, 215 (1984)
10 (quoting United States v. Mendenhall, 446 U.S. 544, 554 (1980) (Stewart, J., joined by Rehnquist, 11 J.). The Supreme Court has subsequently refined this test; it now asks “whether a reasonable 12 person would feel free to decline the officers' requests or otherwise terminate the encounter.”
13 United States v. Drayton, 536 U.S. 194, 202 (2002) (quoting Florida v. Bostick, 501 U.S. 429, 436 Amendment seizure has occurred.” Id.

An officer’s attempt to stop a suspect through a show of authority does not constitute a seizure if the attempt is unsuccessful. See California v. Hodari D., 499 U.S. 621, 626 (1991) (“An arrest requires either physical force . . . or, where that is absent, submission to the assertion of authority” (emphasis in original)). See also United States v. Waterman, 569 F.3d 144, at 146 (3d Cir. 2009) (officers’ drawing their guns did not count as “physical force” within the meaning of Hodari D.); United States v. Smith, 575 F.3d 308, 311, 316 (3d Cir. 2009) (after officer asked Smith to place his hands on patrol car’s hood so that officers “could ‘speak with him further,’” Smith’s two steps toward the car, prior to fleeing, did not “manifest submission” under the circumstances); see also United States v. Lowe, 791 F.3d 424, 434 (3d Cir. 2015) (holding that “when a stationary suspect reacts to a show of authority by not fleeing, making no threatening movement or gesture, and remaining stationary, he has submitted under the Fourth Amendment and a seizure has been effectuated” and declining to “equate Lowe's few backward steps upon seeing several uniformed officers rush toward him with headlong flight”).

¹⁹⁸ See also Brendlin v. California, 127 S. Ct. 2400, 2406-07 (2007) (holding that “during a traffic stop an officer seizes everyone in the vehicle, not just the driver”).

¹⁹⁹ Citing Drayton, the Court of Appeals has rejected the view that a seizure should be presumed when officers approach a person for questioning based on a tip. See United States v. Crandell, 554 F.3d 79, 85 (3d Cir. 2009) (“The subjective intent underlying an officer's approach does not affect the seizure analysis.... [A] seizure does not occur simply because an officer approaches an individual ... to ask questions.... Therefore, a tip police received that motivates

4.12 Section 1983 – Unlawful Seizure

1 officer claims to have been seized by a superior officer, it is important to distinguish between 2 situations in which a reasonable officer would feel that he must obey a command for fear of losing
3 his job (which is not a Fourth Amendment seizure) and situations in which a reasonable officer
4 would feel that he would be detained if he attempted to leave (which is). Gwynn v. Philadelphia,
5 719 F.3d 295, 299-302 (3d Cir. 2013) (distinguishing between orders by a superior officer acting 6 as employer and orders by a superior officer acting as law enforcement agent).

8 As discussed below, the degree of justification required to render a seizure reasonable 9 under the Fourth Amendment varies with the nature and scope of the seizure.²⁰⁰ “The principal 10 components of a determination of reasonable suspicion or probable cause will be the events which their encounter with an individual merely serves to color the backstory at this stage.”).

In James v. City of Wilkes-Barre, 700 F.3d 675 (3d Cir. 2012), police responded to a 911 call reporting that the plaintiff’s daughter planned to commit suicide by taking pills. The defendant officer told the plaintiff and her husband that the daughter “had to go to the hospital for an evaluation.” The parents demurred, but after the defendant said that he would charge them with a crime if their daughter remained at home and suffered injury, they agreed to let her go. The defendant told the parents that “that one of them would need to accompany” their daughter to the hospital. Plaintiff initially refused, but agreed to go after the defendant “persisted.” Id. at 678. The court of appeals held that these allegations did not ground Fourth Amendment claims for false arrest or false imprisonment because no seizure had taken place. The plaintiff’s “assertion that she felt compelled by law” did not “establish that a reasonable person would have felt she had no choice but to comply.” Id. at 681. Though “intimidating police behavior might, under some circumstances, cause one to reasonably believe that compliance is compelled,” the allegations here did not ground such a claim: Plaintiff did not allege that the officers touched her, showed a weapon, “order[ed] her to the police station,” “threaten[ed] to arrest her” if she did not comply, or used “a threatening presence.” The court held that the threat to arrest the parents if they refused to let their daughter go to the hospital did not relate to the question of whether the mother was seized when the defendant told her that one of the parents must accompany the daughter. Id. at 682.

²⁰⁰ In some cases where the nature of the seizure (if any) is in question, a party may wish to ask the court to instruct on both reasonable suspicion and probable cause. Cf. Pitts v. Delaware, 646 F.3d 151, 156 (3d Cir. 2011) (holding that the evidence supported a jury finding that the defendant officer lacked probable cause to arrest the plaintiff, and holding that – because the jury was instructed only on probable cause to arrest and not on reasonable suspicion for an investigative stop – the district court erred in overturning the plaintiff verdict based on a reasonable-suspicion analysis).

1 occurred leading up to the stop or search, and then the decision whether these historical facts,
2 viewed from the standpoint of an objectively reasonable police officer, amount to reasonable
3 suspicion or to probable cause.” Ornelas v. U.S., 517 U.S. 690, 696 (1996).²⁰¹ “The Fourth
4 Amendment tolerates only reasonable mistakes, and those mistakes—whether of fact or of law—
5 must be objectively reasonable.” Heien v. North Carolina, 135 S. Ct. 530, 539 (2014).

7 Justification of seizure based upon “reasonable suspicion.” See Comment 4.12.1 for a 8 discussion of Terry stops.

10 Justification of seizure based upon execution of a search warrant. “Under Michigan v.
11 Summers, 452 U.S. 692 (1981), during execution of a search warrant, police can detain the 12 occupant of the house they have a warrant to search. This is reasonable to protect the police, to 13 prevent flight, and generally to avoid dangerous confusion.” Baker v. Monroe Tp., 50 F.3d 1186, 14 1191 (3d Cir. 1995); see also Muehler v. Mena, 125 S.Ct. 1465, 1472 (2005) (holding that, under 15 the circumstances, officers’ detention of house resident in handcuffs during execution of search
16 warrant on house “did not violate the Fourth Amendment”); id. (opinion of Kennedy, J.) 17 (concurring, but stressing the need to “ensure that police handcuffing during searches becomes 18 neither routine nor unduly prolonged”); Los Angeles County v. Rettele, 127 S.Ct. 1989, 1991, 1993 19 (2007) (per curiam) (holding that officers searching house under valid warrant did not violate the 20 Fourth Amendment rights of innocent residents whom they forced to stand naked for one to two 21 minutes, because one suspect was known to have a firearm and the residents’ bedding could have 22 contained weapons); United States v. Allen, 618 F.3d 404, 409-10 (3d Cir. 2010) (finding detention 23 constitutional under Rettele where, inter alia, “the police ... were executing a valid search warrant
24 for evidence at a bar located in a high-crime area, where patrons were known to carry firearms, 25 and where several firearm-related crimes had recently been committed” and “the detention ... was 26 just long enough for the police to ensure their safety and collect the evidence they sought”).
27 However, law enforcement officials’ “categorical authority [under Summers] to detain incident to 28 the execution of a search warrant must be limited to the immediate vicinity of the premises to be 29 searched.” Bailey v. United States, 133 S. Ct. 1031, 1041 (2013). In Bailey, officers tailed two 30 individuals who departed from the property that housed the apartment that was the subject of the 31 search warrant, and stopped them about a mile away. See id. at 1036. Thus, in holding that 32 Summers did not justify the stop, the Bailey Court did not have occasion to specify what it meant 33 by “immediate vicinity,” but it explained that “[l]imiting the rule in Summers to the area in which 34 an occupant poses a real threat to the safe and efficient execution of a search warrant ensures that 35 the scope of the detention incident to a search is confined to its underlying justification.” Id. at DeFillippo*, 443 U.S. 31, 36 (1979)).

7 Justification of seizure of a material witness. The Court of Appeals has determined that 8 “[t]he liberty interests of a detained material witness are protected by the Fourth Amendment.”
9 Schneyder v. Smith, 653 F.3d 313, 328 (3d Cir. 2011). The Fourth Amendment analysis of such a 10 seizure does not involve an assessment of probable cause. Rather, the decisionmaker must balance 11 the witness’s interest in not being detained against the government’s interest in assuring the 12 witness’s presence to testify. See id. at 328-29.²⁰² As to any given Section 1983 defendant, the 13 decisionmaker must also determine whether the defendant’s conduct was “a substantial factor” in 14 the detention. Id. at 327-28 (holding that prosecutor’s alleged failure to inform court of 15 continuance of trial for which material witness had been detained was a substantial factor in the 16 continued detention where that prosecutor “was the only official who was in a position to do
17 anything about [the witness’s] incarceration”). See also id. at 328 n.20 (noting “the potential ...
18 for a superseding cause argument” based on the notion that the judge might have ordered continued 19 detention even if he had been told of the continuance, but ruling that “[p]roximate cause is ...
20 generally a question for the jury ... and there is ample evidence that [the judge] would have released 21 Schneyder without hesitation had Smith lived up to her obligations”).

23 Arrests upon warrant. See Comment 4.12.3 for a discussion of claims arising from an ²⁰² Because the plaintiff in Schneyder had effectively conceded the constitutionality of the initial detention (and challenged only her detention after the trial was continued), the Court of Appeals noted but did not address the possible argument that because (i) the Fourth Amendment requires that warrants be supported by probable cause, and (ii) ‘probable cause[.]’ [to believe that the person to be seized has committed a crime] cannot exist for a person seized only as a material witness, the entire practice of issuing warrants for and arresting material witnesses is unconstitutional. See [Ashcroft v.

Al-Kidd], 131 S. Ct. [2074,] 2084–85 [(2011)] (suggesting the possibility of such an argument but noting that plaintiff in that case had not taken that position); id. at 2085–86 (Kennedy, J., concurring) (observing that “[t]he scope of the [material witness] statute's lawful authorization is uncertain” because of a possible conflict with the Warrants Clause, but indicating that “material witness arrests might still be governed by the Fourth Amendment's separate reasonableness requirement for seizures of the person”)

6 Seizures based on community caretaking. In Vargas v. City of Philadelphia, 783 F.3d 962
7 (3d Cir. 2015), the court of appeals held that “the community caretaking doctrine can apply in 8 situations when . . . a person outside of a home has been seized for a non-investigatory purpose
9 and to protect that individual or the community at large.” Id. at 972; cf. Ray v. Township of Warren,
10 626 F.3d 170, 177 (3d Cir. 2010) (“The community caretaking doctrine cannot be used to justify 11 warrantless searches of a home.”). See generally Cady v. Dombrowski, 413 U.S. 433, 441 (1973) 12 (“Local police officers, unlike federal officers, frequently investigate vehicle accidents in which 13 there is no claim of criminal liability and engage in what, for want of a better term, may be 14 described as community caretaking functions, totally divorced from the detection, investigation, 15 or acquisition of evidence relating to the violation of a criminal statute.”)

17 Holding the plaintiff after arrest. The Court of Appeals has observed that the law “is not 18 entirely settled” as to whether a police officer can be liable under Section 1983 for failing to try to 19 secure the plaintiff’s release when exculpatory evidence comes to light after a lawful arrest. Wilson

27 The Heck v. Humphrey bar. If a convicted prisoner must show that his or her conviction
28 was erroneous in order to establish the Section 1983 unlawful arrest claim,²⁰³ then the plaintiff

²⁰³ The Third Circuit has reasoned that “[b]ecause a conviction and sentence may be upheld even in the absence of probable cause for the initial stop and arrest . . . claims for false arrest and false imprisonment are not the type of claims contemplated by the Court in Heck which necessarily implicate the validity of a conviction or sentence.” Montgomery v. De Simone, 159 F.3d 120, 126 n.5 (3d Cir. 1998); but see Gibson v. Superintendent of NJ Dept. of Law and Public Safety - Division of State Police, 411 F.3d 427, 450-51 (3d Cir. 2005) (“Heck does not set forth a categorical rule that all Fourth Amendment claims accrue at the time of the violation. This Court’s determination that the plaintiff’s false arrest claim in Montgomery qualified as an exception to the Heck deferral rule, and thus accrued on the night of the arrest, does not mandate a blanket rule that all false arrest claims accrue at the time of the arrest.”). Cf. Rose v. Bartle, 871 F.2d 331, 350-51 (3d Cir. 1989) (expressing doubt concerning the holding of

1 cannot proceed with the claim until the conviction has been reversed or otherwise invalidated. See
2 Heck v. Humphrey, 512 U.S. 477, 486-87 & n.6 (1994) (giving the example of a conviction “for 3 the crime of resisting arrest, defined as intentionally preventing a peace officer from effecting a
4 lawful arrest”).²⁰⁴ However, the Heck impediment is only triggered once there is a criminal
5 conviction. See Wallace v. Kato, 127 S.Ct. 1091, 1097-98 (2007) (holding that “the Heck rule for 6 deferred accrual is called into play only when there exists ‘a conviction or sentence that has not 7 been ... invalidated,’ that is to say, an ‘outstanding criminal judgment.’”). Notably, Heck bars a
8 plaintiff from pressing a claim but does not toll the running of the limitations period. See Wallace, 9 127 S. Ct. at 1099. Under Wallace, a false arrest claim accrues at the time of the false arrest, and 10 the limitations period runs from the point when the plaintiff is no longer detained without legal 11 process. Wallace, 127 S. Ct. at 1096 (“Reflective of the fact that false imprisonment consists of 12 detention without legal process, a false imprisonment ends once the victim becomes held pursuant 13 to such process – when, for example, he is bound over by a magistrate or arraigned on charges.”).
14

15 Relationship to malicious prosecution claims. The common law tort of false arrest covers
16 the time up to the issuance of process, whereas the common law tort of malicious prosecution 17 would cover subsequent events. See Heck, 512 U.S. at 484; Wallace, 127 S. Ct. at 1096; see also 18 Montgomery, 159 F.3d at 126 (“A claim for false arrest, unlike a claim for malicious prosecution,
19 covers damages only for the time of detention until the issuance of process or arraignment, and not 20 more.”); Hector v. Watt, 235 F.3d 154, 156 (3d Cir. 2000), as amended (Jan. 26, 2001) (“[F]alse 21 arrest does not permit damages incurred after an indictment.”). Regarding malicious prosecution another Circuit that “conviction is a complete defense to a section 1983 action for false arrest”).

²⁰⁴ It is unclear whether this bar also applies to persons no longer in custody. See infra Comment to Instruction 4.13.

1 4.12.1 Section 1983 – Unlawful Seizure – Terry Stop and Frisk

5 A “seizure” occurs when a police officer restrains a person in some way, either by means
6 of physical force or by a show of authority that the person obeys. Of course, a seizure does not 7 occur every time a police officer approaches someone to ask a few questions. Such consensual 8 encounters are important tools of law enforcement and need not be based on any suspicion of 9 wrongdoing. However, an initially consensual encounter with a police officer can turn into a 10 seizure, if, in view of all the circumstances, a reasonable person would have believed that [he/she] 11 was not free to end the encounter. If a reasonable person, under the circumstances, would have 12 believed that [he/she] was not free to end the encounter, then at that point the encounter has turned 13 into a “stop” that counts as a “seizure” for purposes of the Fourth Amendment.

15 If you find that [plaintiff] has proved by a preponderance of the evidence that such a stop 16 occurred, then you must decide whether the stop was justified by “reasonable suspicion.”

17
18 The Fourth Amendment requires that any seizure must be reasonable. In order to “stop” a 19 person, the officer must have a “reasonable suspicion” that the person has committed, is 20 committing, or is about to commit a crime. There must be specific facts that, taken together with 21 the rational inferences from those facts, reasonably warrant the stop. [[Plaintiff] has the burden of 22 proving that [defendant] lacked “reasonable suspicion” for the stop.]²⁰⁵ In deciding this issue, you
23 should consider all the facts available to [defendant] at the moment of the stop. You should 24 consider all the events that occurred leading up to the stop, and decide whether those events, 25 viewed from the standpoint of a reasonable police officer, amount to reasonable suspicion. [Keep 26 in mind that a police officer may reasonably draw conclusions, based on his or her training and 27 experience, that might not occur to an untrained person.]²⁰⁶

28
29 [Define the relevant crime[s].]

30
31 [When an officer is investigating a person at close range and the officer is justified in 32 believing that the person is armed and dangerous to the officer or others, the officer may conduct 33 a limited protective search for concealed weapons. But the search must be limited to that which

²⁰⁵ See Comment for a discussion of the burden of proof regarding “reasonable suspicion.”

²⁰⁶ This sentence may be included if there is relevant evidence of the officer’s training and/or experience.

4.12.1 Section 1983 – Unlawful Seizure – Terry Stop and Frisk

1 is necessary to discover such weapons.]

3 The length of the stop must be proportionate to the reasonable suspicion that gave rise to 4 the stop (and any information developed during the stop). Ultimately, unless the stop yields
5 information that provides probable cause to arrest the person, the officer must let the person go. [I
6 will shortly explain more about the concept of “probable cause.”] There is no set rule about the 7 length of time that a person may be detained before the seizure becomes a full-scale arrest. [Rather,
8 you must consider whether the length of the seizure was reasonable. In assessing the length of the 9 seizure, you should take into account whether the police were diligent in pursuing their 10 investigation, or whether they caused undue delay that lengthened the seizure.]²⁰⁷
11

12 As I told you earlier, [plaintiff] must prove that [defendant] intended to commit the acts in 13 question; but apart from that requirement, [defendant’s] actual motivation is irrelevant. If 14 [defendant’s] actions constituted an unreasonable seizure, it does not matter whether [defendant]
15 had good motivations. And an officer’s improper motive is irrelevant to the question whether the 16 objective facts available to the officer at the time gave rise to reasonable suspicion.
17
18

19 Comment 20

21 “[C]ertain investigative stops by police officers [a]re permissible without probable cause,
22 as long as ‘in justifying the particular intrusion [into Fourth Amendment rights] the police officer
23 [is] able to point to specific and articulable facts which, taken together with rational inferences
24 from those facts, reasonably warrant that intrusion.’” Karnes v. Skrutski, 62 F.3d 485, 492 (3d
25 Cir. 1995) (quoting Terry v. Ohio, 392 U.S. 1, 21 (1968)); Adams v. Williams, 407 U.S. 143, 146 26 (1972) (“A brief stop of a suspicious individual, in order to determine his identity or to maintain 27 the status quo momentarily while obtaining more information, may be most reasonable in light of 28 the facts known to the officer at the time.”); U.S. v. Delfin-Colina, 464 F.3d 392, 397 (3d Cir.
29 2006) (holding “that the Terry reasonable suspicion standard applies to routine traffic stops”); see 30 also Baker v. Monroe Tp., 50 F.3d 1186, 1192 (3d Cir. 1995) (“[T]he need to ascertain the Bakers’
31 identity, the need to protect them from stray gunfire, and the need to clear the area of approach for 32 the police to be able to operate efficiently all made it reasonable to get the Bakers down on the 33 ground for a few crucial minutes.”).²⁰⁸

²⁰⁷ If a more detailed discussion of this issue is desired, language from the second paragraph of Instruction 4.12.2 can be added here.

²⁰⁸ In addition, “[w]hen an officer is justified in believing that the individual whose suspicious behavior he is investigating at close range is armed and presently dangerous to the officer or to others, he may conduct a limited protective search for concealed weapons.”

4.12.1 Section 1983 – Unlawful Seizure – Terry Stop and Frisk

1 Such stops require “reasonable suspicion,” which is assessed by reference to the “totality
2 of the circumstances.” Karnes, 62 F.3d at 495; see also Terry, 392 U.S. at 21-22 (analysis

Adams, 407 U.S. at 146 (quoting Terry, 392 U.S. at 24). To fall within this principle, such a search “must be limited to that which is necessary for the discovery of weapons which might be used to harm the officer or others nearby.” Terry, 392 U.S. at 26. As the Supreme Court more recently explained:

[I]n a traffic-stop setting, the first Terry condition – a lawful investigatory stop – is met whenever it is lawful for police to detain an automobile and its occupants pending inquiry into a vehicular violation. The police need not have, in addition, cause to believe any occupant of the vehicle is involved in criminal activity. To justify a patdown of the driver or a passenger during a traffic stop, however, just as in the case of a pedestrian reasonably suspected of criminal activity, the police must harbor reasonable suspicion that the person subjected to the frisk is armed and dangerous.

Arizona v. Johnson, 129 S. Ct. 781, 784 (2009). See also United States v. Murray, 821 F.3d 386 (3d Cir. 2016) (holding that a Terry frisk was appropriate when “officers were lawfully present in a motel room (not a home) and conducted a limited pat-down search for weapons when Murray arrived unexpectedly on the scene presenting a potential threat to their safety”).

If during such a search the officer detects “nonthreatening contraband,” the officer may seize that contraband. Minnesota v. Dickerson, 508 U.S. 366, 373 (1993). As the Court of Appeals has summarized the test:

Assuming that an officer is authorized to conduct a Terry search at all, he is authorized to assure himself that a suspect has no weapons. He is allowed to slide or manipulate an object in a suspect's pocket, consistent with a routine frisk, until the officer is able reasonably to eliminate the possibility that the object is a weapon. If, before that point, the officer develops probable cause to believe, given his training and experience, that an object is contraband, he may lawfully perform a more intrusive search. If, indeed, he discovers contraband, the officer may seize it, and it will be admissible against the suspect. If, however, the officer "goes beyond what is necessary to determine if the suspect is armed, it is no longer valid under Terry and its fruits will be suppressed." Dickerson, 508 U.S. at 373.

United States v. Yamba, 506 F.3d 251, 259 (3d Cir. 2007).

4.12.1 Section 1983 – Unlawful Seizure – Terry Stop and Frisk

1 considers “the facts available to the officer at the moment of the seizure”);²⁰⁹ Johnson v. Campbell,
2 332 F.3d 199, 206 (3d Cir. 2003) (holding that “officers may rely on a trustworthy second hand
3 report, if that report includes facts that give rise to particularized suspicion”).²¹⁰ “Based upon that

²⁰⁹ See United States v. Lewis, 672 F.3d 232, 237-38 (3d Cir. 2012) (holding that illegally tinted car windows could not justify stop of car absent any testimony that officers noticed the tinting prior to making the stop).

In United States v. Whitfield, 634 F.3d 741 (3d Cir. 2010), the court of appeals rejected a defendant’s contention that it should look only to the knowledge of the officer who actually seized the defendant and not to the knowledge of another officer on the scene, which knowledge was unknown to the arresting officer. The court applied the “collective knowledge doctrine,” which imputes “the knowledge of one law enforcement officer ... to the officer who actually conducted the seizure, search, or arrest.” Id. at 745; see also id. at 746 (“It would make little sense to decline to apply the collective knowledge doctrine in a fast-paced, dynamic situation such as we have before us, in which the officers worked together as a unified and tight-knit team; indeed, it would be impractical to expect an officer in such a situation to communicate to the other officers every fact that could be pertinent in a subsequent reasonable suspicion analysis.”).

²¹⁰ Where the basis for the officer’s suspicion is an anonymous tip, corroboration is important. “Unlike a tip from a known informant whose reputation can be assessed and who can be held responsible if her allegations turn out to be fabricated . . . , ‘an anonymous tip alone seldom demonstrates the informant’s basis of knowledge or veracity.’” Florida v. J.L., 529 U.S. 266, 270 (2000) (quoting Alabama v. White, 496 U.S. 325, 329 (1990)). Cf. United States v. Mathurin, 561 F.3d 170, 176 (3d Cir. 2009) (“We need not undertake the established legal methods for testing the reliability of this tip because a tip from one federal law enforcement agency to another implies a degree of expertise and a shared purpose in stopping illegal activity, because the agency’s identity is known.”); United States v. Benoit, 730 F.3d 280, 285 (3d Cir. 2013) (extending the rationale of Mathurin to foreign authorities “with whom our country has a working relationship to prevent drug trafficking”). Nonetheless, “there are situations in which an anonymous tip, suitably corroborated, exhibits ‘sufficient indicia of reliability to provide reasonable suspicion to make the investigatory stop.’” J.L., 529 U.S. at 270 (quoting White, 496 U.S. at 327); see also United States v. Silveus, 542 F.3d 993, 1000 (3d Cir. 2008) (reasonable suspicion rested in large part on anonymous tip that “appeared to be reliable, given that it was corroborated by the agents’ prior knowledge”).

In United States v. Torres, 534 F.3d 207 (3d Cir. 2008), the Court of Appeals based its finding of reasonable suspicion on the information provided by a taxi driver’s 911 call; the court noted that this call constituted a tip by “an innominate (i.e., unidentified) informant who could be found if his tip proved false rather than an anonymous (i.e., unidentifiable) tipster who could lead

1 whole picture the detaining officers must have a particularized and objective basis for suspecting,”
2 U.S. v. Cortez, 449 U.S. 411, 417 (1981), that the specific person they stop “has committed, is 3 committing, or is about to commit a crime,” Berkemer v. McCarty, 468 U.S. 420, 439 (1984).²¹¹
4 Reasonable suspicion can arise from “an officer's observation of entirely legal acts, where the acts,
5 when viewed through the lens of a police officer's experience and combined with other 6 circumstances, [lead] to an articulable belief that a crime [is] about to be committed.” Johnson, 7 332 F.3d at 207.²¹² The test is an objective one; “subjective good faith” does not suffice to justify the police astray without fear of accountability.” As the court summarized the evidence: “[T]he informant provided a detailed account of the crime he had witnessed seconds earlier, gave a clear account of the weapon and the vehicle used by Torres, and specified his own occupation, the kind and color of the car he was driving, and the name of his employer. The veracity and detail of this information were enhanced by the fact that the informant continued to follow Torres, providing a stream of information meant to assist officers in the field.” Id. at 213. See also United States v. Johnson, 592 F.3d 442, 449-50 (3d Cir. 2010) (reasonable suspicion existed based on non-anonymous 911 call reporting a shooting and providing details – some of which matched police observations – regarding vehicle containing persons involved in the shooting); Prado Navarette v. California, 134 S. Ct. 1683 (2014) (upholding stop based on an anonymous tip where the tipster claimed eyewitness knowledge of dangerous driving by a specific vehicle, the timeline suggested that it was a contemporaneous report given under the stress of the startling event of being run off the road, and the tipster used the 911 calling system, which can be recorded and traced).

²¹¹ The requisite reasonable suspicion focuses on the elements of the crime and not on an affirmative defense. Compare United States v. Gatlin, 613 F.3d 374, 377-79 (3d Cir. 2010) (rejecting defendant’s argument – that officers lacked reasonable suspicion because they did not know “whether he was licensed to carry a concealed weapon” – on the ground that under Delaware law possession of a license is an affirmative defense), with United States v. Lewis, 672 F.3d 232, 240 (3d Cir. 2012) (in holding that tip concerning firearms in car did not provide reasonable suspicion to justify the stop of the car, relying on fact that “Virgin Islands law contains no presumption that an individual lacks a permit to carry a firearm”).

²¹² As the Court explained in Cortez, “The analysis proceeds with various objective observations, information from police reports, if such are available, and consideration of the modes or patterns of operation of certain kinds of lawbreakers. From these data, a trained officer draws inferences and makes deductions – inferences and deductions that might well elude an untrained person.” Cortez, 449 U.S. at 418. See also United States v. Navedo, 694 F.3d 463, 468 (3d Cir. 2012) (holding that “[t]he reasonable suspicion required under Terry is specific to the person who is detained”).

4.12.1 Section 1983 – Unlawful Seizure – Terry Stop and Frisk

1 a stop. Terry, 392 U.S. at 22. However, “reasonable suspicion can rest on a mistaken
2 understanding of the scope of a legal prohibition.” Heien v. North Carolina, 135 S. Ct. 530
3 (2014).²¹³

4 The scope of the ensuing stop²¹⁴ and questioning must be proportionate to the reasonable
5 suspicion, and unless that inquiry yields probable cause the officers must then let the person go.
6 See Berkemer, 468 U.S. at 439-40.²¹⁵ “[T]here is no per se rule about the length of time a suspect
7 may be detained before the detention becomes a full-scale arrest”; rather, “the court must examine 8 the reasonableness of the detention.” Baker, 50 F.3d at 1192 (holding that “a detention of fifteen 9 minutes time to identify and release a fairly large group of people during a drug raid” is not 10 “unreasonable”). “[I]n assessing the effect of the length of the detention,” the Court “take[s] into 11 account whether the police diligently pursue their investigation.” U.S. v. Place, 462 U.S. 696, 709 12 (1983).

14 Although a police officer has reasonable suspicion of a traffic violation to justify a stop to 15 investigate that violation, he may not extend an otherwise-completed traffic stop, absent
16 reasonable suspicion of a drug offense, in order to conduct a dog sniff. Rodriguez v. United States,
17 135 S. Ct. 1609 (2015). See also United States v. Thompson, 772 F.3d 752, 759 (3d Cir. 2014)
18 (holding that an officer had reasonable suspicion for a drug sniff after a traffic stop because the 19 defendant was “visibly nervous, with a shaky voice and a vein on his neck pulsating rapidly,” his 20 “answers to questions came out hesitatingly,” and the amount of his luggage “appeared to be 21 inconsistent with the stated length of the trip”).

²¹³ This approach is more forgiving of an officer’s mistake of law than the prior doctrine in the Third Circuit, which found reasonable suspicion only if an officer who understood the law correctly would have had reasonable suspicion. See United States v. Delfin-Colina, 464 F.3d 392, 400-01 (3d Cir. 2006) (noting that the officer “made a significant mistake of law,” but “because an objective review of the facts shows that an officer who correctly interpreted [the statute] and was in [the officer’s] position would have possessed reasonable suspicion . . . [the] mistake of law did not render the traffic stop unconstitutional”).

²¹⁴ See also Johnson, 592 F.3d at 452, 453 (given that officers “reasonably suspected that the taxi’s occupants had been involved in a physical altercation and shooting just minutes before,” it was not unreasonable for officers to “surround[] the vehicle, dr[a]w their weapons, shout[] at the taxicab’s occupants, and subsequently handcuff” them).

²¹⁵ See United States v. Navedo, 694 F.3d 463, 474 (3d Cir. 2012) (“Unprovoked flight can only elevate reasonable suspicion to probable cause if police have ‘reasonably trustworthy information or circumstances’ to believe that an individual is engaged in criminal activity . . .”) (quoting United States v. Laville, 480 F.3d 187, 194 (3d Cir. 2007)).

4.12.1 Section 1983 – Unlawful Seizure – Terry Stop and Frisk

1 A Terry stop carries with it the right to use some degree of physical coercion. In Carman
2 v. Carroll, 749 F.3d 192 (3d Cir. 2014), rev'd on other grounds, 135 S. Ct. 348 (2014), an officer 3 was searching for an armed man and encountered an unidentified man who turned away and 4 appeared to reach for his waist. The officer grabbed the man's arm until he saw that the man was 5 unarmed. The court upheld a jury verdict that the officer acted reasonably in grabbing the man's 6 arm.

8 As noted in the Comment to Instruction 4.12.2, in the case of a warrantless arrest, Third 9 Circuit caselaw divides as to the burden of proof regarding probable cause. By contrast, the 10 caselaw does not appear to have addressed the burden of proof regarding reasonable suspicion in 11 the case of a Terry stop; but one district court decision concerning an analogous issue suggests that 12 the burden would be on the plaintiff. See Armington v. School Dist. of Philadelphia, 767 F. Supp.
13 661, 667 (E.D.Pa.) (in Section 1983 case involving school district's order that bus driver undergo 14 urinalysis, holding that the bus driver plaintiff "has the burden of proving that defendant lacked 15 reasonable suspicion"), aff'd without opinion, 941 F.2d 1200 (3d Cir. 1991).

1 4.12.2 Section 1983 – Unlawful Seizure – Arrest – Probable Cause

3 Model

5 An arrest is a “seizure,” and the Fourth Amendment prohibits police officers from arresting 6 a person unless there is probable cause to do so.

8 [In this case, [plaintiff] claims that [defendant] arrested [him/her], but [defendant] argues
9 that [he/she] merely stopped [plaintiff] briefly and that this stop did not rise to the level of an arrest.
10 You must decide whether the encounter between [plaintiff] and [defendant] was merely a stop, or 11 whether at some point it became an arrest. In deciding whether an arrest occurred, you should 12 consider all the relevant circumstances. Relevant circumstances can include, for example, the 13 length of the interaction; whether [defendant] was diligent in pursuing the investigation, or whether 14 [he/she] caused undue delay that lengthened the seizure; whether [defendant] pointed a gun at 15 [plaintiff]; whether [defendant] physically touched [plaintiff]; whether [defendant] used handcuffs
16 on [plaintiff]; whether [defendant] moved [plaintiff] to a police facility; and whether [defendant]
17 stated that [he/she] was placing [plaintiff] under arrest. Relevant circumstances also include 18 whether [defendant] had reason to be concerned about safety.]²¹⁶

20 [If you find that an arrest occurred, then]²¹⁷ you must decide whether [[defendant] has 21 proved by a preponderance of the evidence that the arrest was justified by probable cause]
22 [[plaintiff] has proved by a preponderance of the evidence that [defendant] lacked probable cause
23 to arrest [plaintiff]].²¹⁸

25 To determine whether probable cause existed, you should consider whether the facts and 26 circumstances available to [defendant] would warrant a prudent officer in believing that [plaintiff]
27 had committed or was committing a crime.

28
29 [Define the relevant crime[s].] [Under [the relevant] law, the offense of [name offense] is ²¹⁶ Include this paragraph only if the defendant disputes that an arrest occurred.

²¹⁷ Include this phrase only if the defendant disputes that an arrest occurred.

²¹⁸ In the case of a warrantless arrest, some Third Circuit caselaw supports the view that the defendant has the burden of proof as to probable cause, but other Third Circuit precedent indicates the contrary. See Comment 4.12.2. Accordingly, the model includes alternative language concerning the burden on this issue.

4.12.2 Section 1983 – Unlawful Seizure – Arrest – Probable Cause

1 a misdemeanor, not a felony. This means that because [defendant] did not have a warrant for the 2 arrest, [defendant] could only arrest [plaintiff] for [name offense] if [plaintiff] committed [name
3 offense] in [defendant's] presence.²¹⁹

5 [In this case the state prosecutor decided not to prosecute the criminal charge against 6 [plaintiff]. The decision whether to prosecute is within the prosecutor's discretion, and he or she 7 may choose not to prosecute a charge for any reason. Thus, the decision not to prosecute [plaintiff]
8 does not establish that [defendant] lacked probable cause to arrest [plaintiff]. You must determine 9 whether [defendant] had probable cause based upon the facts and circumstances known to 10 [defendant] at the time of the arrest, not what happened afterwards.]
11

12 Probable cause requires more than mere suspicion; however, it does not require that the 13 officer have evidence sufficient to prove guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. The standard of 14 probable cause represents a balance between the individual's right to liberty and the government's 15 duty to control crime. Because police officers often confront ambiguous situations, room must be 16 allowed for some mistakes on their part. But the mistakes must be those of reasonable officers.
17

18 [As I told you earlier, [plaintiff] must prove that [defendant] intended to commit the acts 19 in question; but apart from that requirement, [defendant's] actual motivation is irrelevant. If 20 [defendant's] actions constituted an unreasonable seizure, it does not matter whether [defendant]
21 had good motivations. And an officer's improper motive is irrelevant to the question whether the 22 objective facts available to the officer at the time gave rise to probable cause.]²²⁰

25 Comment

26
27 Justification of seizure based upon "probable cause." "The Fourth Amendment prohibits 28 a police officer from arresting a citizen except upon probable cause." Rogers v. Powell, 120 F.3d 29 446, 452 (3d Cir. 1997); see also Patzig v. O'Neil, 577 F.2d 841, 848 (3d Cir. 1978) ("Clearly, an

²¹⁹ Third Circuit caselaw has not clearly settled whether warrantless arrests for misdemeanors committed outside the officer's presence are permitted by the Fourth Amendment. See Comment.

²²⁰ If Instruction 4.12.3 (concerning warrant applications) will be given, it may be advisable to revise or omit this paragraph, because, as stated in Instruction 4.12.3, the jury will be directed to consider whether the defendant made deliberately or recklessly false statements or omissions.

4.12.2 Section 1983 – Unlawful Seizure – Arrest – Probable Cause

1 arrest without probable cause is a constitutional violation actionable under s 1983.”²²¹

3 The standard of probable cause “represents a necessary accommodation between the 4 individual's right to liberty and the State's duty to control crime.” Gerstein v. Pugh, 420 U.S. 103, 5 112 (1975). “Because many situations which confront officers in the course of executing their 6 duties are more or less ambiguous, room must be allowed for some mistakes on their part. But the 7 mistakes must be those of reasonable men, acting on facts leading sensibly to their conclusions of 8 probability.” Id. at 112 (quoting Brinegar v. United States, 338 U.S. 160, 176 (1949)).²²² There 9 must exist “facts and circumstances ‘sufficient to warrant a prudent man in believing that the 10 (suspect) had committed or was committing an offense.’” Gerstein, 420 U.S. at 111 (quoting Beck
11 v. Ohio, 379 U.S. 89, 91 (1964)). “Probable cause to arrest requires more than mere suspicion;
12 however, it does not require that the officer have evidence sufficient to prove guilt beyond a 13 reasonable doubt.” Orsatti v. New Jersey State Police, 71 F.3d 480, 482-83 (3d Cir. 1995). The

²²¹ Sometimes there may be a dispute as to whether the defendant in fact subjected the plaintiff to an arrest rather than merely a lesser type of seizure. “There is no per se rule that pointing guns at people, or handcuffing them, constitutes an arrest. . . . But use of guns and handcuffs must be justified by the circumstances” Baker, 50 F.3d at 1193. (The use of guns or handcuffs can in some circumstances give rise to an excessive force claim. See id.; see also Kopec v. Tate, 361 F.3d 772, 777 (3d Cir. 2004).)

Whether the seizure rises to the level of an arrest (so as to require probable cause) depends on the circumstances. See, e.g., Kaupp v. Texas, 538 U.S. 626, 631 (2003) (per curiam) (holding that arrest occurred in case where defendant “was taken out in handcuffs, without shoes, dressed only in his underwear in January, placed in a patrol car, driven to the scene of a crime and then to the sheriff's offices, where he was taken into an interrogation room and questioned”); Dunaway v. New York, 442 U.S. 200, 212 (1979) (holding that detention was “in important respects indistinguishable from a traditional arrest” where suspect was “taken from a neighbor's home to a police car, transported to a police station, and placed in an interrogation room,” was “never informed that he was ‘free to go,’” and “would have been physically restrained if he had refused to accompany the officers or had tried to escape their custody”).

²²² In United States v. Sed, 601 F.3d 224 (3d Cir. 2010), the fact that an arrest by Pennsylvania State Police occurred in Ohio and violated Ohio state law did not establish a Fourth Amendment violation. See id. at 228. Rather, the Court of Appeals analyzed the totality of the circumstances – which included the fact that the arrest occurred less than 100 yards from the Pennsylvania border – and concluded that the seizure was reasonable because the failure to wait until the suspects entered Pennsylvania “was nothing more than an honest mistake and a de minimis one at that.” Id. at 229.

4.12.2 Section 1983 – Unlawful Seizure – Arrest – Probable Cause

1 analysis is a pragmatic one and should be based upon common sense.²²³

3 “Improper motive . . . is irrelevant to the question whether the objective facts available to 4 the officers at the time reasonably could have led the officers to conclude that [the person] was 5 committing an offense.” Estate of Smith v. Marasco, 318 F.3d 497, 514 (3d Cir. 2003); see also 6 Whren v. United States, 517 U.S. 806, 813 (1996) (rejecting the “argument that the constitutional
7 reasonableness of traffic stops depends on the actual motivations of the individual officers
8 involved”); Ashcroft v. Al-Kidd, 131 S. Ct. 2074, 2080-81 (2011) (stating that apart from the 9 “special-needs and administrative-search” contexts, the Court has “almost uniformly rejected
10 invitations to probe subjective intent” when analyzing reasonableness under the Fourth 11 Amendment); Mosley v. Wilson, 102 F.3d 85, 94-95 (3d Cir. 1996).²²⁴

²²³ Discussing the issuance of search warrants, the Court has held:

The task of the issuing magistrate is simply to make a practical, common sense decision whether, given all the circumstances set forth in the affidavit before him, including the ‘veracity’ and ‘basis of knowledge’ of persons supplying hearsay information, there is a fair probability that contraband or evidence of a crime will be found in a particular place. And the duty of a reviewing court is simply to ensure that the magistrate had a ‘substantial basis for . . . conclud[ing]’ that probable cause existed.

Illinois v. Gates, 462 U.S. 213, 238-39 (1983) (quoting Jones v. United States, 362 U.S. 257, 271 (1960), overruled on other grounds by United States v. Salvucci, 448 U.S. 83 (1980)).

Questions concerning the interaction between probable cause and improper motive can also arise outside the context of race discrimination. In Reichle v. Howards, 132 S. Ct. 2088 (2012), the plaintiff claimed that he was arrested “in retaliation for his political speech.” Id. at 2091. The Reichle Court noted, without deciding, the question of whether a claim for retaliatory

4.12.2 Section 1983 – Unlawful Seizure – Arrest – Probable Cause

1 “In a § 1983 action the issue of whether there was probable cause to make an arrest is 2 usually a question for the jury....” Sharrar v. Felsing, 128 F.3d 810, 818 (3d Cir. 1997); see also
3 Deary v. Three Un-Named Police Officers, 746 F.2d 185, 192 (3d Cir. 1984) (same), overruled on 4 other grounds by Anderson v. Creighton, 483 U.S. 635 (1987); Snell v. City of York, 564 F.3d 659,
5 671-72 (3d Cir. 2009) (“Clarification of the specific factual scenario must precede the probable
6 cause inquiry. We conclude that determining these facts was properly the job of the jury”); Pitts
7 v. Delaware, 646 F.3d 151, 156 (3d Cir. 2011) (reversing grant of judgment as a matter of law to 8 defendant, and reasoning that “[t]he jury could have concluded on the evidence that probable cause 9 was lacking” where defendant officer admitted that at the time he detained plaintiff he had not 10 decided whether to arrest him and where defendant’s stated reason for detaining plaintiff – safety 11 concerns – was not mentioned in defendant’s contemporaneous report).²²⁵

13 The Court of Appeals has suggested that “the burden of proof as to the existence of 14 probable cause may well fall upon the defendant, once the plaintiff has shown an arrest and 15 confinement without warrant.” Patzig, 577 F.2d at 849 n.9; see also Losch v. Borough of 16 Parkesburg, 736 F.2d 903, 909 (3d Cir. 1984) (in case involving malicious prosecution claim, 17 stating that “defendants bear the burden at trial of proving the defense of good faith and probable 18 cause”); compare Comment 4.13 (discussing burden of proof regarding probable cause element of 19 malicious prosecution claims).²²⁶ The Patzig court based this observation partly on the burden-arrest requires a showing that there was a lack of probable cause. See id. at 2094-96.

²²⁶ By contrast, another Circuit has shifted the burden of production but not the burden of proof:

Although the plaintiff bears the burden of proof on the issue of unlawful arrest, she can make a prima facie case simply by showing that the arrest was conducted without a valid warrant. At that point, the burden shifts to the defendant to provide some evidence that the arresting officers had probable cause for a warrantless arrest. The plaintiff still has the ultimate burden of proof, but the burden of production falls on the defendant.

Dubner v. City and County of San Francisco, 266 F.3d 959, 965 (9th Cir. 2001); see also Davis v. Rodriguez, 364 F.3d 424, 433 n.8 (2d Cir. 2004) (noting circuit split as to “which side carries the burden regarding probable cause” with respect to Section 1983 false arrest claims).

4.12.2 Section 1983 – Unlawful Seizure – Arrest – Probable Cause

1 shifting scheme at common law, and partly on the Supreme Court’s reasoning in Pierson v. Ray,
2 386 U.S. 547 (1967). See Patzig, 577 F.2d at 849 n.9 (noting that the Pierson Court “spoke of 3 good faith and probable cause as defenses to a [Section] 1983 action for unconstitutional
4 arrest”).²²⁷ Some years after deciding Patzig and Losch – and without citing either case – the Court
5 of Appeals decided Edwards v. City of Philadelphia, 860 F.2d 568 (3d Cir. 1988). In Edwards,
6 the Court of Appeals addressed the burden of proof on an excessive force claim arising from a
7 warrantless arrest. See id. at 570-71. The Edwards plaintiff “concede[d] that the burden to negate
8 probable cause in making the arrest [fell] to him,” id. at 571, and the Court of Appeals proceeded 9 on that assumption, holding that the plaintiff “ha[d] not demonstrated that” probable cause was 10 absent, id. at 571 n.2. The Court of Appeals further held that the plaintiff had the burden of proving 11 that the force employed was excessive: Analyzing excessive force in the course of an arrest as a 12 deprivation of due process, the court explained that “[t]he occurrence of that deprivation . . . is the 13 first element of the § 1983 claim and, accordingly, proving it is part of the plaintiff’s burden.” Id.
14 at 573. In Iafrate v. Globosits, 1989 WL 14062 (E.D.Pa. Feb. 22, 1989), another excessive force
15 case stemming from a warrantless arrest, the court relied on Edwards to hold that the “plaintiff 16 must show that the officer lacked probable cause to effect the arrest, or that the force used was 17 excessive,” id. at *3. It is not clear, accordingly, which party has the burden of proof as to probable 18 cause for a warrantless arrest.

²²⁷ Pierson is distinguishable from a typical Fourth Amendment false arrest case. In Pierson, clergy members attempting to use a segregated bus terminal in Jackson, Mississippi were arrested by city police and charged with misdemeanors under a state statute. See Pierson, 386 U.S. at 549. (The state statute was later held unconstitutional as applied to a similar situation, because it was used to enforce race discrimination in a facility used for interstate transportation. See id. at 550 n.4.) The core of the plaintiffs’ claims in Pierson, then, was that the arrests were motivated by a desire to enforce segregation. See id. at 557 (noting plaintiffs’ claim that “the police officers arrested them solely for attempting to use the ‘White Only’ waiting room”). That the Court placed the burden on the defendant officers to prove good faith and probable cause in Pierson, then, may not conclusively establish that defendants have a similar burden in run-of-the-mill Fourth Amendment false arrest cases.

In addition, under current law, an officer’s subjective good faith generally is relevant neither to the arrest’s compliance with the Fourth Amendment nor to the question of qualified immunity. However, the court of appeals has held “that a police officer who relies in good faith on a prosecutor’s legal opinion that [an] arrest is warranted under the law is presumptively entitled to qualified immunity from Fourth Amendment claims premised on a lack of probable cause.” Kelly v. Borough of Carlisle, 622 F.3d 248, 255-56 (3d Cir. 2010). The plaintiff “may rebut this presumption by showing that, under all the factual and legal circumstances surrounding the arrest, a reasonable officer would not have relied on the prosecutor’s advice.” Id.

4.12.2 Section 1983 – Unlawful Seizure – Arrest – Probable Cause

1 The Committee has noted a similar question, concerning burden of proof, with respect to 2 the lack-of-probable cause element in claims for malicious prosecution. See infra Comment 4.13.
3 Unlike Instruction 4.12.2 – which provides two alternative formulations, one with the burden on 4 the plaintiff and one with the burden on the defendant – Instruction 4.13 places the burden on the 5 plaintiff. The reason for the difference between the approaches taken in the two instructions is 6 that while recent Third Circuit cases have held that malicious prosecution plaintiffs have the 7 burden of proving lack of probable cause, the caselaw in the context of false arrest claims – as 8 noted above – is more equivocal.

10 When the facts alleged to constitute probable cause include an informant’s tip, the presence
11 or absence of probable cause should be determined by assessing the “totality of the circumstances.”
12 Illinois v. Gates, 462 U.S. 213, 230 (1983) (assessing probable cause in the context of a judge’s 13 issuance of a search warrant). The decisionmaker should consider “all the various indicia of 14 reliability (and unreliability) attending an informant’s tip.” Id. at 234. Indicia of reliability can 15 include the fact that an informant has been accurate in the past, or that the informant’s account is 16 first-hand and highly detailed, or that the informant is known to be an honest private citizen, or 17 that the police acquire independent confirmation of some of the details stated in the informant’s
18 tip. See id. at 233-34, 241-44.²²⁸ By contrast, an informant’s “wholly conclusory statement” –
19 bereft of any supporting detail – would not provide an appropriate basis for a finding of probable 20 cause. See id. at 239.

22 The probable cause analysis in cases of eyewitness identification is fact-specific. The 23 Court of Appeals has stated that “a positive identification by a victim witness, without more, would 24 usually be sufficient to establish probable cause,” but that might not be true if, for example, there 25 is “[i]ndependent exculpatory evidence or substantial evidence of the witness’s own unreliability 26 that is known by the arresting officers.” Wilson v. Russo, 212 F.3d 781, 790 (3d Cir. 2000); id. at 27 797 (Pollak, D.J., concurring in part and dissenting in part) (stating that “the court’s rejection of a
28 per se rule is surely correct”); compare id. at 793 (Garth, J., concurring) (“Inconsistent or 29 contradictory evidence . . . cannot render invalid . . . a positive identification by an eyewitness who 30 either a police officer or magistrate deemed to be reliable.”); see also Sharrar, 128 F.3d at 818
31 (“When a police officer has received a reliable identification by a victim of his or her attacker, the 32 police have probable cause to arrest.”).

33
34 “The legality of a seizure based solely on statements issued by fellow officers depends on 35 whether the officers who issued the statements possessed the requisite basis to seize the suspect.”
36 Rogers v. Powell, 120 F.3d 446, 453 (3d Cir. 1997). However, “where a police officer makes an 37 arrest on the basis of oral statements by fellow officers, an officer will be entitled to qualified ²²⁸ For a decision applying the Gates test to an application for a search warrant, see United States v. Stearn, 597 F.3d 540, 555-56 (3d Cir. 2010).

4.12.2 Section 1983 – Unlawful Seizure – Arrest – Probable Cause

1 immunity from liability in a civil rights suit for unlawful arrest provided it was objectively
2 reasonable for him to believe, on the basis of the statements, that probable cause for the arrest
3 existed.” Id. at 455; see also Capone v. Marinelli, 868 F.2d 102, 105 (3d Cir. 1989). As soon as 4 the officer learns of the error, though, the officer must release the prisoner: “Continuing to hold an 5 individual in handcuffs once it has been determined that there was no lawful basis for the initial 6 seizure is unlawful within the meaning of the Fourth Amendment.” Rogers, 120 F.3d at 456.

8 If an officer otherwise had probable cause to believe that a suspect had violated a criminal
9 statute, the presence of probable cause is not necessarily negated by the fact that the statute is later
10 invalidated. See Michigan v. DeFillippo, 443 U.S. 31, 37-38 (1979) (noting “the possible
11 exception of a law so grossly and flagrantly unconstitutional that any person of reasonable 12 prudence would be bound to see its flaws”). The Court of Appeals has cited with apparent approval 13 “the principle” – articulated by some other circuits – “that an unambiguously invalid law cannot,
14 by itself, provide probable cause to arrest.” McMullen v. Maple Shade Twp., 643 F.3d 96, 100 (3d 15 Cir. 2011). From this principle the McMullen majority reasoned that “in certain circumstances, an 16 arrest pursuant to a law that is unambiguously invalid for reasons based solely on state law grounds 17 may constitute a Fourth Amendment violation actionable under § 1983.” Id. However, that 18 reasoning did not produce a ruling for the plaintiff in McMullen itself because in that case the 19 ordinance under which the plaintiff was arrested was not “unambiguously invalid.” Id.; see also 20 id. at 101 (observing that “it is not the domain of federal courts to resolve undecided questions of 21 state law”).²²⁹ More generally, the Fourth Amendment tolerates reasonable mistakes—both of fact 22 and of law—so long as the mistake is objectively reasonable. Heien v. North Carolina, 135 S. Ct.
23 530, 539 (2014).

²²⁹ On a related point, the fact that the charges are later dismissed as time-barred does not show that the officer lacked probable cause to make the arrest. “A police officer has limited training in the law and requiring him to explore the ramifications of the statute of limitations affirmative defense is too heavy a burden.” Sands v. McCormick, 502 F.3d 263, 269 (3d Cir.
2007). (The Sands court noted that “the dates of the offenses were disclosed in the affidavit of probable cause that was submitted to the magistrate,” and that “[t]here is no indication that the magistrate had any hesitancy about issuing the arrest warrant.”). See also Holman v. City of York, 564 F.3d 225, 231 (3d Cir. 2009) (“We do not endorse the District Court’s statement that affirmative defenses are ‘not a relevant consideration’ – as we have never so held – but we do conclude that, here, the defense of necessity need not have been considered in the assessment of probable cause for arrest for trespass at the scene.”). Cf. United States v. Gatlin, 613 F.3d 374, 377-79 (3d Cir. 2010) (rejecting defendant’s argument – that officers lacked reasonable suspicion because they did not know “whether he was licensed to carry a concealed weapon” – on the ground that under Delaware law possession of a license is an affirmative defense).

4.12.2 Section 1983 – Unlawful Seizure – Arrest – Probable Cause

1 “Whether probable cause exists depends upon the reasonable conclusion to be drawn from 2 the facts known to the arresting officer at the time of the arrest.” Devenpeck v. Alford, 543 U.S.
3 146, 152 (2004).²³⁰ The relevant question is whether those facts provided probable cause to arrest
4 for any crime, whether or not that crime was the stated reason for the arrest: The court should not 5 confine the inquiry to the facts “bearing upon the offense actually invoked at the time of arrest,” 6 and should not require that “the offense supported by these known facts . . . be ‘closely related’ to 7 the offense that the officer invoked” at the time of the arrest. Id. at 153.²³¹

9 Warrantless arrests. “A warrantless arrest of an individual in a public place for a felony,
10 or a misdemeanor committed in the officer's presence, is consistent with the Fourth Amendment
11 if the arrest is supported by probable cause.” Maryland v. Pringle, 540 U.S. 366, 370 (2003).²³²

²³⁰ See also Gilles v. Davis, 427 F.3d 197, 206 (3d Cir. 2005) (stating, with respect to qualified immunity analysis, that “whether it was reasonable to believe there was probable cause is in part based on the limited information that the arresting officer has at the time”).

²³¹ Cf. United States v. Prandy-Binett, 995 F.2d 1069, 1073-74 (D.C. Cir. 1993) (“It is simply not the law that officers must be aware of the specific crime an individual is likely committing... It is enough that they have probable cause to believe the defendant has committed one or the other of several offenses, even though they cannot be sure which one.”).

If an officer arrested the plaintiff on two charges and had probable cause to arrest the plaintiff on one charge, but not on another, the plaintiff cannot recover for the arrest on the latter charge if the arrest on the latter charge resulted in no additional harm to the plaintiff. See Merkle v. Upper Dublin School Dist., 211 F.3d 782, 790 n.7 (3d Cir. 2000) (so holding, but noting that “a different conclusion may be warranted if the additional charge results in longer detention, higher bail, or some other added disability”).

²³² “If an officer has probable cause to believe that an individual has committed even a very minor criminal offense in his presence, he may, without violating the Fourth Amendment, arrest the offender.” Atwater v. City of Lago Vista, 532 U.S. 318, 354 (2001). The Atwater Court expressly left open whether the misdemeanor must have been committed in the officer’s presence. See Atwater, 532 U.S. at 341 n.11 (“We need not, and thus do not, speculate whether the Fourth Amendment entails an ‘in the presence’ requirement for purposes of misdemeanor arrests.”).

In United States v. Myers, the Court of Appeals decided a suppression issue based in part upon an officer’s failure to comply with a state-law provision that authorized warrantless arrest “only if the offense is committed in the presence of the arresting officer or when specifically authorized by statute.” U.S. v. Myers, 308 F.3d 251, 256 (3d Cir. 2002) (alternative holding). In

1 “[T]he Constitution permits an officer to arrest a suspect without a warrant if there is probable
2 cause to believe that the suspect has committed or is committing an offense.” DeFillippo, 443
3 U.S. at 36. “The validity of the arrest does not depend on whether the suspect actually committed 4 a crime; the mere fact that the suspect is later acquitted of the offense for which he is arrested is 5 irrelevant to the validity of the arrest.” Id.

7 “Although police may make a warrantless arrest in a public place if they have probable
8 cause to believe the suspect is a felon, ‘the Fourth Amendment has drawn a firm line at the entrance 9 to the house. Absent exigent circumstances, that threshold may not reasonably be crossed without 10 a warrant.’” Sharrar, 128 F.3d at 819 (quoting Payton v. New York, 445 U.S. 573, 590 (1980)).²³³
11 If law enforcement officers arrest a suspect at what they know to be a third party’s home, they 12 need both an arrest warrant and a search warrant, Steagald v. United States, 451 U.S. 204 (1981), 13 but if they arrest a suspect at his own residence, they need only an arrest warrant and “reason to 14 believe” that the suspect is present at the time of entry, Payton v. New York, 445 U.S. 573 (1980).
15 In United States v. Vasquez-Algarin, 821 F.3d 467 (3d Cir. 2016), the court of appeals concluded
16 that Payton’s “reason to believe” standard requires probable cause to believe that the suspect 17 resides at and is then present within the residence.

18
19 “The government bears the burden of proving that exigent circumstances existed.”
20 Sharrar, 128 F.3d at 820. “[A] warrantless intrusion may be justified by hot pursuit of a fleeing 21 felon, or imminent destruction of evidence . . . , or the need to prevent a suspect’s escape, or the United States v. Laville, 480 F.3d 187 (3d Cir. 2007), the Court of Appeals held “that the unlawfulness of an arrest under state or local law does not make the arrest unreasonable per se under the Fourth Amendment; at most, the unlawfulness is a factor for federal courts to consider in evaluating the totality of the circumstances surrounding the arrest.” Laville, 480 F.3d at 196; see also id. at 192 (explaining that Myers “made it quite clear ... that the validity of an arrest under state law is at most a factor that a court may consider in assessing the broader question of probable cause”). More recently, the Supreme Court has made clear that the Fourth Amendment analysis is unaffected by state-law restrictions on the circumstances under which a warrantless arrest may be made for a crime committed in an officer’s presence: “[W]arrantless arrests for crimes committed in the presence of an arresting officer are reasonable under the Constitution, and ... while States are free to regulate such arrests however they desire, state restrictions do not alter the Fourth Amendment’s protections.” Virginia v. Moore, 128 S.Ct. 1598, 1607 (2008).

²³³ The “community caretaking” doctrine, see Cady v. Dombrowski, 413 U.S. 433, 441
(1973), does not apply to warrantless entry into a home. See Ray v. Township of Warren, 626
F.3d 170, 177 (3d Cir. 2010) (“The community caretaking doctrine cannot be used to justify warrantless searches of a home.”).

1 risk of danger to the police or to other persons inside or outside the dwelling.” State v. Olson, 436
2 N.W.2d 92, 97 (Minn. 1989) (quoted with general approval in Minnesota v. Olson, 495 U.S. 91, 3 100 (1990)).²³⁴ “A court makes the determination of whether there were exigent circumstances by 4 reviewing the facts and reasonably discoverable information available to the officers at the time
5 they took their actions and in making this determination considers the totality of the circumstances
6 facing them.” Marasco, 318 F.3d at 518.

8 Requirement of a prompt determination of probable cause after a warrantless arrest. The 9 government “must provide a fair and reliable determination of probable cause as a condition for 10 any significant pretrial restraint of liberty, and this determination must be made by a judicial officer 11 either before or promptly after arrest.” Gerstein, 420 U.S. at 125. Based on the balance between 12 the government’s “interest in protecting public safety” and the harm that detention can inflict on 13 the individual, the Supreme Court has held “that a jurisdiction that provides judicial determinations
14 of probable cause within 48 hours of arrest will, as a general matter, comply with the promptness 15 requirement of Gerstein.” County of Riverside v. McLaughlin, 500 U.S. 44, 52, 56 (1991). If the 16 judicial determination is provided within 48 hours of arrest, the burden is on the prisoner to show
17 that the length of the delay, though less than 48 hours, was nonetheless unreasonable. See 18 McLaughlin, 500 U.S. at 56 (listing possible bases for a finding of unreasonableness). By contrast, 19 if the delay extends longer than 48 hours, “the burden shifts to the government to demonstrate the 20 existence of a bona fide emergency or other extraordinary circumstance.” Id. at 57.

²³⁴ “[L]aw enforcement officers ‘may enter a home without a warrant to render emergency assistance to an injured occupant or to protect an occupant from imminent injury.’” Michigan v. Fisher, 130 S. Ct. 546, 548 (2009) (per curiam) (quoting Brigham City v. Stuart, 547 U.S. 398, 403 (2006)). See also Kentucky v. King, 131 S. Ct. 1849, 1856-58 (2011) (noting “several exigencies that may justify a warrantless search of a home” and holding that “the exigent circumstances rule justifies a warrantless search when the conduct of the police preceding the exigency is reasonable”); Marasco, 318 F.3d at 518 (exigent circumstances exist “if the safety of either law enforcement or the general public is threatened”).

1 4.12.3 Section 1983 – Unlawful Seizure – Arrest – Warrant Application

3 Model

5 In this case, prior to arresting [plaintiff], [defendant] obtained a warrant authorizing the 6 arrest. [Plaintiff] asserts that [defendant] obtained the warrant by [making false statements]
7 [means of omissions that created a falsehood] in the warrant affidavit.

9 To show that the arrest pursuant to this warrant violated the Fourth Amendment, [plaintiff]
10 must prove each of the following three things by a preponderance of the evidence:
11

12 First: In the warrant affidavit, [defendant] made false statements, or omissions that created 13 a falsehood.
14

15 Second: [Defendant] made those false statements or omissions either deliberately, or with 16 a reckless disregard for the truth.
17

18 Third: Those false statements or omissions were material, or necessary, to the finding of 19 probable cause for the arrest warrant.
20

21 Omissions are made with reckless disregard for the truth when an officer omits facts that 22 are so obvious that any reasonable person would know that a judge would want to know those 23 facts. Assertions are made with reckless disregard for the truth when an officer has obvious
24 reasons to doubt the truth of what [he/she] is asserting. It is not enough for [plaintiff] to prove that 25 [defendant] was negligent or that [defendant] made an innocent mistake.
26

27 To determine whether any misstatements or omissions were material, you must subtract 28 the misstatements from the warrant affidavit, and add the facts that were omitted, and then 29 determine whether the warrant affidavit, with these corrections, would establish probable cause.
30
31

32 Comment

33
34 The Supreme Court’s discussion in Wallace v. Kato, 127 S.Ct. 1091 (2007), indicates that 35 unlawful seizure claims based upon an arrest made pursuant to a warrant are analogous to the tort 36 of malicious prosecution rather than to the tort of false arrest. In Wallace, the Court held that the 37 tort of false imprisonment provided “the proper analogy” to the plaintiff’s Fourth Amendment 38 claim because the claim arose “from respondents’ detention of petitioner without legal process in 39 January 1994. They did not have a warrant for his arrest.” Wallace, 127 S. Ct. at 1095. The 40 Wallace Court explained that once legal process is provided, the tort of false imprisonment ends

4.12.3 Section 1983 – Unlawful Seizure – Warrant Application

1 and any subsequent detention implicates the tort of malicious prosecution. See id. at 1096. The 2 Wallace Court did not, however, indicate how this classification would affect the elements of a
3 claim for unlawful seizure pursuant to a warrant. See id. at 1096 n.2 (“We have never explored
4 the contours of a Fourth Amendment malicious-prosecution suit under § 1983, see Albright v.
5 Oliver, 510 U.S. 266, 270-271, 275 (1994) (plurality opinion), and we do not do so here.”).
6 Malicious prosecution claims in general are discussed below in Comment 4.13.

8 If the officer making an affidavit in support of an arrest warrant application includes “a 9 false statement knowingly and intentionally, or with reckless disregard for the truth,” and if,
10 without that false statement, the application would not suffice to establish probable cause, then the 11 warrant is invalid. Franks v. Delaware, 438 U.S. 154, 155-56 (1978).²³⁵ “This does not mean . . .
12 that every fact recited in the warrant affidavit [must] necessarily [be] correct, for probable cause 13 may be founded upon hearsay and upon information received from informants, as well as upon 14 information within the affiant's own knowledge that sometimes must be garnered hastily.” Id. at 15 165. “[A] plaintiff may succeed in a § 1983 action for false arrest made pursuant to a warrant if 16 the plaintiff shows, by a preponderance of the evidence: (1) that the police officer ‘knowingly and 17 deliberately, or with a reckless disregard for the truth, made false statements or omissions that 18 create a falsehood in applying for a warrant;’ and (2) that ‘such statements or omissions are 19 material, or necessary, to the finding of probable cause.’” Wilson v. Russo, 212 F.3d 781, 786-87
20 (3d Cir. 2000) (quoting Sherwood v. Mulvihill, 113 F.3d 396, 399 (3d Cir.1997)); see also Merkle
21 v. Upper Dublin School Dist., 211 F.3d 782, 789 (3d Cir. 2000).²³⁶

²³⁵ A modified version of this instruction could be used with respect to search warrants. For an opinion applying the Franks test in the context of a search warrant application, see United States v. Pavulak, 700 F.3d 651 (3d Cir. 2012). In Pavulak, the court held that the affidavit submitted in support of a search warrant application “was insufficient to establish probable cause for child pornography,” but that “because the officers reasonably relied on the warrants in good faith, . . . the District Court properly denied suppression.” Id. at 655. The court then held that the district court properly denied the defendant’s request for a Franks hearing. See id. at 665-66 (reasoning that affidavit’s omission of dates of conduct underlying prior convictions was irrelevant because the convictions themselves did not help to establish probable cause that defendant had been viewing child pornography, and that affidavit’s misstatement of the address where the defendant assertedly viewed child pornography was immaterial under the circumstances).

²³⁶ In Wilson, the plaintiff contended “that even if the statements are not material, he should at least get nominal damages for [the defendant’s] failure to provide the judge with exculpatory information,” but the court refused to address this argument because it was not timely raised. See Wilson, 212 F.3d at 789 n.6.

4.12.3 Section 1983 – Unlawful Seizure – Warrant Application

1 “Proof of negligence or innocent mistake is insufficient.” Lippay v. Christos, 996 F.2d
2 1490, 1501 (3d Cir. 1993); see Franks, 438 U.S. at 171. In addition, when a government affiant
3 includes information provided by another government agency pursuant to a court order, the Franks
4 standard becomes harder to meet because “government agents should generally be able to presume
5 that information received from a sister governmental agency is accurate.” U.S. v. Yusuf, 461 F.3d
6 374, 378 (3d Cir. 2006).²³⁷ On the other hand, “the police cannot insulate a deliberate falsehood
7 from a Franks inquiry simply by laundering the falsehood through an unwitting affiant who is 8 ignorant of the falsehood.” U.S. v. Shields, 458 F.3d 269, 276 (3d Cir. 2006).²³⁸

10 Shields and Yusuf might at first glance seem to be in tension, but they can be reconciled by

²³⁷ The Yusuf court held that when information provided by a sister government agency under court order turns out to be false,

[t]o demonstrate that a government official acted recklessly in relying upon such information, a defendant must first show that the information would have put a reasonable official on notice that further investigation was required. If so, a defendant may establish that the officer acted recklessly by submitting evidence: (1) of a systemic failure on the agency's part to produce accurate information upon request; or (2) that the officer's particular investigation into possibly inaccurate information should have given the officer an obvious reason to doubt the accuracy of the information.

Yusuf, 461 F.3d at 378. The Court of Appeals noted that this alternative holding was ultimately “inconsequential” to the outcome of the case, because even if the affidavit were reformulated to exclude the challenged portions, “[t]he reformulated affidavit clearly establishes probable cause to authorize the search warrants.” Id. at 388.

²³⁸ In Shields, an undercover FBI agent subscribed to a website in the course of his investigation of online child pornography. See Shields, 458 F.3d at 270-71. That agent distributed to other agents a template containing information for use in prosecuting child pornography cases; the template asserted that all those who joined the website in question were automatically subscribed to a particular email list, by means of which child pornography was distributed. See id. at 271-72. A second FBI agent incorporated this assertion into an affidavit in support of a search warrant application in connection with his investigation of Shields. See id. at 272-73. It was subsequently discovered that the assertion concerning automatic subscription was false. See id. at 274-75. The Shields court, however, rejected Shields' challenge to the warrant, because the court held that the affidavit “even purged of the offending material supports a finding of probable cause,” id. at 277; thus, Shields' discussion of laundering a falsehood through an unwitting affiant is dictum.

4.12.3 Section 1983 – Unlawful Seizure – Warrant Application

1 focusing on whether each case involved a danger that government investigators colluded to launder
2 a falsehood through an unwitting government affiant. In Yusuf, the problem with the federal 3 government’s warrant application stemmed from erroneous information provided by the Virgin
4 Islands Bureau of Internal Revenue, which produced the information pursuant to a court order
5 rather than as part of a program of cooperation with the federal authorities. The Court of Appeals 6 stressed that

8 VIBIR did not disclose United’s tax records voluntarily, but rather was required to 9 do so because of an independent court order. This fact is important, as it detracts
10 from any possible allegations that VIBIR and the FBI colluded to produce false
11 information in the affidavit. Nor did VIBIR initiate the investigation with the FBI, 12 which helps allay concerns that VIBIR deliberately provided false information to 13 the FBI to cover up bad faith or improper motive.

15 461 F.3d at 387; see also id. at 396 (emphasizing the need to avoid “invit[ing] collusion among 16 different agencies to insulate deliberate misstatements”).

17
18 The reckless disregard standard applies differently to omissions than to affirmative 19 statements: “(1) omissions are made with reckless disregard for the truth when an officer recklessly
20 omits facts that any reasonable person would know that a judge would want to know; and (2) 21 assertions are made with reckless disregard for the truth when an officer has obvious reasons to 22 doubt the truth of what he or she is asserting.” Wilson, 212 F.3d at 783; see also Lippay, 996 F.2d 23 at 1501 (to show reckless disregard, plaintiff must prove that defendant “made the statements in 24 his affidavits ‘with [a] high degree of awareness of their probable falsity’” (quoting Garrison v.
25 Louisiana, 379 U.S. 64, 74 (1964))); United States v. Brown, 631 F.3d 638, 650 (3d Cir. 2011) 26 (finding no clear error in district court’s finding that federal agent who prepared affidavit in support 27 of warrant application based on conversation with state trooper about trooper’s investigation acted 28 with reckless disregard when he included a paragraph in the affidavit that lacked any support in 29 the fruits of the trooper’s investigation); Goodwin v. Conway, 836 F.3d 321, 328 (3d Cir. 2016) 30 (rejecting the argument that a booking sheet that showed a date of arrest shortly before the day of 31 the crime and had a blank line for date of release was exculpatory, reasoning that because the 32 booking sheet was undated, it was impossible for the detectives to infer that the plaintiff was still 33 incarcerated on the day of the crime, and concluding that the booking sheet did not trigger a duty
34 to investigate further); Dempsey v. Bucknell University, 834 F.3d 457, 472-73 (3d Cir. 2016) 35 (holding that various information supporting the arrestee’s version of the events in a college dorm 36 should have been included in the affidavit).

37
38 “To determine the materiality of the misstatements and omissions,” the decisionmaker 39 must “excise the offending inaccuracies and insert the facts recklessly omitted, and then determine 40 whether or not the ‘corrected’ warrant affidavit would establish probable cause.” Wilson, 212 F.3d
41 at 789 (quoting Sherwood, 113 F.3d at 400); see also Reedy v. Evanson, 615 F.3d 197, 211-23 (3d

4.12.3 Section 1983 – Unlawful Seizure – Warrant Application

1 Cir. 2010) (applying this test). In Dempsey v. Bucknell University, 834 F.3d 457, 470 & n.8 (3d
2 Cir. 2016), the court clarified that this analysis requires district courts to literally “perform a word-
3 by-word reconstruction of the affidavit” unless that is impracticable, and noted that “where 4 additional information in the record bears on the materiality of the recklessly omitted information
5 to probable cause, that additional information also should be included in the reconstructed
6 affidavit.” (Dempsey also explains how the summary judgment standard interacts with probable
7 cause. Id. at 468.)
8

9 “[A] mistakenly issued or executed warrant cannot provide probable cause for an arrest,” 10 even if the arrest is carried out by an officer other than the one who obtained the warrant. Berg v.
11 County of Allegheny, 219 F.3d 261, 270 (3d Cir. 2000). As the Supreme Court has explained, 12 although “police officers called upon to aid other officers in executing arrest warrants are entitled 13 to assume” that the warrant application contained a showing of probable cause, “[w]here . . . the 14 contrary turns out to be true, an otherwise illegal arrest cannot be insulated from challenge by the 15 decision of the instigating officer to rely on fellow officers to make the arrest.” Whiteley v.
16 Warden, 401 U.S. 560, 568 (1971); see also Berg, 219 F.3d at 270 (quoting Whiteley); Goodwin
17 v. Conway, 836 F.3d 321, 329 n.35 (3d Cir. 2016) (holding that an indictment after an arrest does 18 not provide probable cause for an arrest that already took place).
19

20 However, qualified immunity may protect an officer who relied on the existence of a 21 warrant. See Malley v. Briggs, 475 U.S. 335, 343 (1986). An officer who obtained a warrant “will 22 not be immune if, on an objective basis, it is obvious that no reasonably competent officer would 23 have concluded that a warrant should issue; but if officers of reasonable competence could disagree
24 on this issue, immunity should be recognized.” Id. at 341; see also Messerschmidt v. Millender, 25 132 S. Ct. 1235, 1245, 1249 (2012) (holding that in light of magistrate’s issuance of warrant, 26 defendant officers were entitled to qualified immunity unless their reliance on the warrant was 27 “plainly incompetent” or “entirely unreasonable”).²³⁹ Thus, the qualified immunity question “is 28 whether a reasonably well trained officer in [the defendant’s] position would have known that his 29 affidavit failed to establish probable cause and that he should not have applied for the warrant.”

²³⁹ In Messerschmidt, the Court gave weight – in its qualified immunity analysis – to “the fact that the officers sought and obtained approval of the warrant application from a superior and a deputy district attorney before submitting it to the magistrate.” Messerschmidt, 132 S. Ct. at 1249. Cf. Kelly v. Borough of Carlisle, 622 F.3d 248, 255-56 (3d Cir. 2010). (holding that “a police officer who relies in good faith on a prosecutor’s legal opinion that the arrest is warranted under the law is presumptively entitled to qualified immunity from Fourth Amendment claims premised on a lack of probable cause,” but that “a plaintiff may rebut this presumption by showing that, under all the factual and legal circumstances surrounding the arrest, a reasonable officer would not have relied on the prosecutor’s advice”).

4.12.3 Section 1983 – Unlawful Seizure – Warrant Application

1 Malley, 475 U.S. at 345; see also Messerschmidt, 132 S. Ct. at 1248 n.6 (stressing objective nature
2 of inquiry and upholding qualified immunity with respect to officer’s reliance on warrant 3 authorizing search for gang-related items in part because the facts that the officer included in the 4 warrant application supported an inference that the suspect’s attack on his girlfriend was gang-
5 related – despite the officer’s later testimony that he did not believe the crime was gang-related).²⁴⁰
6 Similarly, if an officer makes an arrest based upon a warrant obtained by another officer, qualified
7 immunity will protect the arresting officer if he acted “based on an objectively reasonable belief
8 that” the warrant was valid; but “an apparently valid warrant does not render an officer immune
9 from suit if his reliance on it is unreasonable in light of the relevant circumstances.” Berg, 219
10 F.3d at 273.

11
12 In Malley, the trial court had ruled that “the act of the judge in issuing the arrest warrants
13 for respondents broke the causal chain between petitioner’s filing of a complaint and respondents’ 14 arrest.” Malley, 475 U.S. at 339. Although the defendants did not press this argument before the 15 Supreme Court, the Court noted in a footnote its rejection of the rationale:

16
17 It should be clear . . . that the District Court’s “no causation” rationale in this case
18 is inconsistent with our interpretation of § 1983. As we stated in Monroe v. Pape, 19 365 U.S. 167, 187 . . . (1961), § 1983 “should be read against the background of 20 tort liability that makes a man responsible for the natural consequences of his 21 actions.” Since the common law recognized the causal link between the submission 22 of a complaint and an ensuing arrest, we read § 1983 as recognizing the same causal 23 link.

24
25 Malley, 475 U.S. at 345 n.7. The Court of Appeals has given this language a narrow interpretation:

26
27 To the extent that the common law recognized the causal link between a complaint 28 and the ensuing arrest, it was in the situation where “misdirection” by omission or 29 commission perpetuated the original wrongful behavior. . . . If, however, there had 30 been an independent exercise of judicial review, that judicial action was a 31 superseding cause that by its intervention prevented the original actor from being 32 liable for the harm. . . . Thus, the cryptic reference to the common law in Malley’s 33 footnote 7 would appear to preclude judicial action as a superseding cause only in ²⁴⁰ The Court of Appeals has held that if that if the reckless disregard standard (discussed above) is met then the defendant is foreclosed from establishing qualified immunity: “If a police officer submits an affidavit containing statements he knows to be false or would know are false if he had not recklessly disregarded the truth, the officer obviously failed to observe a right that was clearly established.” Lippay, 996 F.2d at 1504. For a discussion of related considerations, see Comment 4.7.2.

4.12.3 Section 1983 – Unlawful Seizure – Warrant Application

1 the situation in which the information, submitted to the judge, was deceptive.

3 Egervary v. Young, 366 F.3d 238, 248 (3d Cir. 2004).

5 Egervary's interpretation of Malley's dictum is questionable, because the Supreme Court's
6 description of the defendants' conduct in Malley includes no suggestion that they submitted
7 deceptive information. In addition, more recent precedent confirms that an officer can be liable 8 for executing a defective search warrant, even where there was no allegation of deception in the 9 warrant application. In Groh v. Ramirez, the defendant executed a search pursuant to a warrant 10 that "failed to identify any of the items that petitioner intended to seize" (though the warrant 11 application had described those items with particularity). Groh v. Ramirez, 540 U.S. 551, 554
12 (2004). The lack of particularity rendered the warrant "plainly invalid." Id. at 557. The Court
13 rejected the defendant's "argument that any constitutional error was committed by the Magistrate, 14 not petitioner," explaining that the defendant "did not alert the Magistrate to the defect in the 15 warrant that petitioner had drafted, and we therefore cannot know whether the Magistrate was 16 aware of the scope of the search he was authorizing. Nor would it have been reasonable for 17 petitioner to rely on a warrant that was so patently defective, even if the Magistrate was aware of 18 the deficiency." Id. at 561 n.4. Having held it "incumbent on the officer executing a search warrant 19 to ensure the search is lawfully authorized and lawfully conducted," id. at 563, the Court denied 20 the defendant qualified immunity because "even a cursory reading of the warrant in this case –
21 perhaps just a simple glance – would have revealed a glaring deficiency that any reasonable police 22 officer would have known was constitutionally fatal," id. at 564.

23
24 Thus, though Egervary seems to indicate that the supervening cause doctrine applies when 25 an officer obtains a warrant (unless the warrant application contains misleading information),
26 Egervary's approach appears to be in some tension with Supreme Court precedent.²⁴¹ In any event,
27 Instruction 4.12.3 is designed for use in cases where the plaintiff asserts that the warrant 28 application contained material falsehoods or omissions.

29
30 Unlike a person arrested without a warrant, "a person arrested pursuant to a warrant issued 31 by a magistrate on a showing of probable cause is not constitutionally entitled to a separate judicial 32 determination that there is probable cause to detain him pending trial." Baker v. McCollan, 443

²⁴¹ An additional Court of Appeals decision, though, seemed to rely on a magistrate's review of a warrant application as evidence that the officer did not err in seeking the warrant: In Sands v. McCormick, 502 F.3d 263 (3d Cir. 2007), when the court held that the later dismissal of a charge as time-barred does not show that the officer lacked probable cause to obtain an arrest warrant, the court also noted that "the dates of the offenses were disclosed in the affidavit of probable cause that was submitted to the magistrate," and that "[t]here is no indication that the magistrate had any hesitancy about issuing the arrest warrant." See id. at 269-70.

4.12.3 Section 1983 – Unlawful Seizure – Warrant Application

1 U.S. 137, 143 (1979); see id. at 145 (assuming, “arguendo, that, depending on what procedures
2 the State affords defendants following arrest and prior to actual trial, mere detention pursuant to a 3 valid warrant but in the face of repeated protests of innocence will after the lapse of a certain 4 amount of time deprive the accused of ‘liberty . . . without due process,’” but holding that “a
5 detention of three days over a New Year's weekend does not and could not amount to such a 6 deprivation”).

1 4.13 Section 1983 – Malicious Prosecution

3 Model

5 [Plaintiff] claims that [defendant] violated [plaintiff’s] Fourth Amendment rights by 6 initiating the prosecution of [plaintiff] for [describe crime[s]].

8 To establish this claim of malicious prosecution, [plaintiff] must prove the following [five] 9 things by a preponderance of the evidence:

10
11 First: [Defendant] initiated the criminal proceeding against [plaintiff].

12
13 Second: [Defendant] lacked probable cause to initiate the proceeding.²⁴²

14
15 Third: The criminal proceeding ended in [plaintiff’s] favor.

16
17 Fourth: [Defendant] acted maliciously or for a purpose other than bringing [plaintiff] to 18 justice.

19 20 Fifth: As a consequence of the proceeding, [plaintiff] suffered a significant deprivation of 21 liberty.²⁴³

23 [In this case, the first, third and fifth of these issues are not in dispute: [Defendant] admits
24 that [he/she] initiated the criminal proceeding; and I instruct you that the criminal proceeding 25 ended in [plaintiff’s] favor and that [plaintiff] suffered a deprivation of liberty consistent with the 26 concept of seizure.]²⁴⁴

27
28 As to the second element of [plaintiff’s] malicious prosecution claim, [plaintiff] must prove 29 that [defendant] lacked probable cause to initiate the proceeding. To determine whether probable

²⁴² See Comment for a discussion of the burden of proof with respect to this element.

²⁴³ If this element of the claim is disputed, the court may wish to give examples of deprivations of liberty that would rise to the level of a seizure. See Comment (discussing Gallo v. City of Philadelphia, 161 F.3d 217 (3d Cir. 1998), and DiBella v. Borough of Beachwood, 407 F.3d 599 (3d Cir. 2005)).

²⁴⁴ The defendant’s initiation of the proceeding will often be undisputed. If possible, the court should rule as a matter of law on the questions of favorable termination and of seizure.

4.13 Section 1983 – Malicious Prosecution

1 cause existed, you should consider whether the facts and circumstances available to [defendant]
2 would warrant a prudent person in believing that [plaintiff] had committed the crime of [name the 3 crime]. [Define the relevant crime under state law.]

5 [[Defendant] has pointed out that [plaintiff] was indicted by a grand jury. The indictment
6 establishes that there was probable cause to initiate the proceeding unless [plaintiff] proves by a 7 preponderance of the evidence that the indictment was obtained by fraud, perjury or other corrupt
8 means.]

10 As to the fourth element of the malicious prosecution claim, [plaintiff] must prove that in 11 initiating the proceeding, [defendant] acted out of spite, or that [defendant] did not 12 [himself/herself] believe that the proceeding was proper, or that [defendant] initiated the 13 proceeding for a purpose unrelated to bringing [plaintiff] to justice.
14

15 [Even if you find that [plaintiff] has proven the elements of [plaintiff’s] malicious
16 prosecution claim, [defendant] asserts that [he/she] is not liable on this claim because [plaintiff]
17 was in fact guilty of the offense with which [he/she] was charged. The fact that [plaintiff] was 18 acquitted in the prior criminal case does not bar [defendant] from trying to prove that [plaintiff]
19 was in fact guilty of the offense; a verdict of not guilty in a criminal case only establishes that the 20 government failed to prove guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. If you find that [defendant] has 21 proven by a preponderance of the evidence that [plaintiff] was actually guilty of the offense, then 22 [defendant] is not liable on [plaintiff’s] malicious prosecution claim.]
23
24

25 Comment

26
27 Third Circuit law concerning Section 1983 claims for malicious prosecution is not entirely
28 clear. Prior to the Supreme Court’s decision in Albright v. Oliver, 510 U.S. 266 (1994), the Court 29 of Appeals held that the common law elements of malicious prosecution were both necessary and 30 sufficient to state a Section 1983 claim. Post-Albright, those elements are not sufficient, but they 31 are still necessary.
32

33 The pre-Albright test. Before 1994, plaintiffs in the Third Circuit could “bring malicious 34 prosecution claims under § 1983 by alleging the common law elements of the tort.” Donahue v.
35 Gavin, 280 F.3d 371, 379 (3d Cir. 2002) (citing Lee v. Mihalich, 847 F.2d 66, 69-70 (3d Cir.
36 1988)); see also Albright, 510 U.S. at 270 n.4 (plurality opinion) (stating that among the federal 37 courts of appeals, “[t]he most expansive approach is exemplified by the Third Circuit, which holds 38 that the elements of a malicious prosecution action under § 1983 are the same as the common-law
39 tort of malicious prosecution”). Typically, a plaintiff was required to prove “(1) the defendants 40 initiated a criminal proceeding; (2) the criminal proceeding ended in plaintiff’s favor; (3) the

4.13 Section 1983 – Malicious Prosecution

1 proceeding was initiated without probable cause; and (4) the defendants acted maliciously or for a
2 purpose other than bringing the plaintiff to justice.” Donahue, 280 F.3d at 379 (stating test
3 determined by reference to Pennsylvania law); see also Lippay v. Christos, 996 F.2d 1490, 1503
4 (3d Cir. 1993) (discussing malice element with reference to Pennsylvania law); Rose v. Bartle, 871
5 F.2d 331, 349 (3d Cir. 1989). The Court of Appeals “assumed that by proving a violation of the 6 common law tort, the plaintiff proved a violation of substantive due process that would support a 7 § 1983 claim for malicious prosecution suit.” Donahue, 280 F.3d at 379.

9 Albright v. Oliver. In Albright, the plaintiff surrendered to authorities after a warrant was 10 issued for his arrest; he was released on bail, and the charge was later dismissed because it failed
11 to set forth a crime under state law. See Albright, 510 U.S. at 268 (plurality opinion). Albright 12 sued under Section 1983, asserting a “substantive due process [right] . . . to be free from criminal 13 prosecution except upon probable cause.” Id. at 269. A fractured Court affirmed the dismissal of 14 Albright’s claim. Writing for a four-Justice plurality, Chief Justice Rehnquist explained that “it is 15 the Fourth Amendment, and not substantive due process, under which petitioner Albright’s claim 16 must be judged.” Id. at 271. The plurality reasoned that in the field of criminal procedure, 17 “[w]here a particular Amendment ‘provides an explicit textual source of constitutional protection’
18 against a particular sort of government behavior, ‘that Amendment, not the more generalized
19 notion of ‘substantive due process,’ must be the guide for analyzing these claims.’” Id. at 273
20 (quoting Graham v. Connor, 490 U.S. 386, 395 (1989)).²⁴⁵ While conceding that not all the 21 “required incidents of a fundamentally fair trial” flow from the Bill of Rights, the plurality argued 22 that any such incidents not covered by a Bill of Rights provision would arise as a matter of 23 procedural, not substantive, due process. See Albright, 510 U.S. at 273 n.6.

24
25 Justice Kennedy, joined by Justice Thomas, concurred in the judgment. He agreed that a 26 claim for arrest without probable cause should be analyzed under the Fourth Amendment.
27 However, Justice Kennedy noted that Albright’s claim focused on malicious prosecution, not 28 unlawful arrest, and he argued that the Court should extend the rule of Parratt v. Taylor, 451 U.S.
29 527 (1981), to govern claims like Albright’s: Because the relevant state “provides a tort remedy 30 for malicious prosecution,” Justice Kennedy asserted that Albright’s claim should not be 31 cognizable under Section 1983. Albright, 510 U.S. at 285 (Kennedy, J., joined by Thomas, J., 32 concurring in the judgment).

33
34 Justice Souter also concurred in the judgment. Though he did not believe that the existence

²⁴⁵ Justice Scalia concurred in the plurality opinion; as he explained, he both disagrees with the notion of substantive due process and takes the view that the Court’s precedents recognizing substantive due process rights do not extend to situations addressed by provisions in the Bill of Rights. See Albright, 510 U.S. at 275-76 (Scalia, J., concurring). Justice Ginsburg also concurred in the plurality opinion. See id. at 276 (Ginsburg, J., concurring).

4.13 Section 1983 – Malicious Prosecution

1 of a relevant Bill of Rights provision necessarily precluded a due process claim, he argued that the 2 Court should exercise “restraint” in recognizing such a due process right: It should not do so
3 absent a substantial violation not redressable under a specific Bill of Rights provision. Albright, 4 510 U.S. at 286, 288-89 (Souter, J., concurring in the judgment).

6 Justice Stevens, joined by Justice Blackmun, dissented, arguing that “the initiation of a 7 criminal prosecution ... [is] a deprivation of liberty,” and that the process required prior to such a 8 deprivation includes a justifiable finding of probable cause. See id. at 295-97, 300 (Stevens, J., 9 joined by Blackmun, J., dissenting).

10
11 The Albright plurality explicitly left open the possibility that a Fourth Amendment 12 violation could ground a malicious prosecution claim. See id. at 275 (“[W]e express no view as to 13 whether petitioner's claim would succeed under the Fourth Amendment.”). Also, because Albright
14 did not assert a procedural due process claim, see id. at 271, Albright appears to leave open the 15 possibility that such a violation could provide the basis for a malicious prosecution claim.

16
17 Post-Albright cases. The Court of Appeals, while recognizing “that Albright commands 18 that claims governed by explicit constitutional text may not be grounded in substantive due 19 process,” has noted that malicious prosecution claims may be grounded in “police conduct that 20 violates the Fourth Amendment, the procedural due process clause or other explicit text of the 21 Constitution.” Torres v. McLaughlin, 163 F.3d 169, 172-73 (3d Cir. 1998).²⁴⁶ Instruction 4.13 is 22 designed for use in cases where the plaintiff premises the malicious prosecution claim on a Fourth
23 Amendment violation; adjustment would be necessary in cases premised on other constitutional 24 violations.

25
26 Where the malicious prosecution claim sounds in the Fourth Amendment, the plaintiff
27 “must show ‘some deprivation of liberty consistent with the concept of “seizure.””” Gallo v. City
28 of Philadelphia, 161 F.3d 217, 222 (3d Cir. 1998) (quoting Singer v. Fulton County Sheriff, 63

²⁴⁶ A plaintiff can state a claim by alleging that the defendant initiated the malicious prosecution in retaliation for the plaintiff’s exercise of First Amendment rights. See Merkle v. Upper Dublin School Dist., 211 F.3d 782, 798 (3d Cir. 2000) (holding school district superintendent not entitled to qualified immunity on plaintiff’s claim “that [the superintendent], and through him the District, maliciously prosecuted Merkle in retaliation for her protected First Amendment activities”); see also Losch v. Borough of Parkesburg, 736 F.2d 903, 907-08 (3d Cir. 1984) (“[I]nstitution of criminal action to penalize the exercise of one's First Amendment rights is a deprivation cognizable under § 1983.”). In a First Amendment retaliatory-prosecution claim, the plaintiff must plead and prove lack of probable cause (among other elements). See Hartman v. Moore, 126 S. Ct. 1695, 1707 (2006).

4.13 Section 1983 – Malicious Prosecution

1 F.3d 110, 116 (2d Cir. 1995)). In Gallo, the court found a seizure where the plaintiff “had to post
2 a $10,000 bond, he had to attend all court hearings including his trial and arraignment, he was 3 required to contact Pretrial Services on a weekly basis, and he was prohibited from traveling 4 outside New Jersey and Pennsylvania.” Gallo, 161 F.3d at 222; compare DiBella v. Borough of 5 Beachwood, 407 F.3d 599, 603 (3d Cir. 2005) (acknowledging that “[p]retrial custody and some 6 onerous types of pretrial, non custodial restrictions constitute a Fourth Amendment seizure,” but 7 holding that plaintiffs’ “attendance at trial did not qualify as a Fourth Amendment seizure”)²⁴⁷
8 with Black v. Montgomery County, 835 F.3d 358, 367-68 (3d Cir. 2016) (holding that a criminal 9 defendant who flew from her home in California to Pennsylvania for her arraignment, spent more
10 than an hour being fingerprinted and photographed at a police station, was required to post
11 unsecured bail of $50,000, travelled between California and Pennsylvania numerous times for pre-12 trial hearings, and would have forfeited her bond if she failed to appear, was seized). A prisoner
13 who is already lawfully confined is not seized for Fourth Amendment purposes when he is charged 14 with another crime. Curry v. Yachera, 835 F.3d 373, 380 (3d Cir. 2016). The plaintiff also must 15 show that the seizure was unreasonable under the Fourth Amendment; in the malicious prosecution 16 context, that requirement typically will be equivalent to the traditional common law element of 17 lack of probable cause, discussed below.

18
19 The law has not developed uniformly, in recent years, on the applicability of the common 20 law elements of malicious prosecution. Five months after Albright, in Heck v. Humphrey, the 21 Court shaped the contours of a Section 1983 claim for unconstitutional conviction in part by 22 reference to the common law tort’s requirement of favorable termination. See Heck v. Humphrey, 23 512 U.S. 477, 484 (1994). However, four Justices, concurring in the judgment, denied that the 24 common law elements should apply to the constitutional tort. See id. at 494 (Souter, J., joined by 25 Blackmun, Stevens, & O’Connor, JJ., concurring in the judgment) (arguing for example that a 26 plaintiff – who had been convicted on the basis of a confession that had been coerced by police 27 officers who had probable cause to believe the plaintiff was guilty – should not be barred from 28 bringing a Section 1983 unconstitutional conviction claim for failure to show a lack of probable
29 cause); cf. Hartman v. Moore, 126 S. Ct. 1695, 1702 (2006) (noting in a First Amendment 30 retaliatory-prosecution case that “the common law is best understood here more as a source of 31 inspired examples than of prefabricated components of Bivens torts”).

32
33 In a post-Heck case, the Court of Appeals rejected the contention that a Section 1983 claim 34 alleging “unconstitutional conviction and imprisonment on murder charges” does not accrue until 35 there is “a judicial finding of actual innocence”; the court relied partly on the rationale that Heck

²⁴⁷ “Although Fourth Amendment seizure principles may in some circumstances have implications in the period between arrest and trial, . . . posttrial incarceration does not qualify as a Fourth Amendment seizure.” Torres, 163 F.3d at 174.

4.13 Section 1983 – Malicious Prosecution

1 “should not be read to incorporate all of the common law of malicious prosecution into the federal 2 law governing civil rights cases of this kind.” Smith v. Holtz, 87 F.3d 108, 110, 113-14 (3d Cir.
3 1996).²⁴⁸ Similarly, the Court of Appeals noted in Gallo that

5 by suggesting that malicious prosecution in and of itself is not a harm, Albright also 6 suggests that a plaintiff would not need to prove all of the common law elements
7 of the tort in order to recover in federal court. For instance, if the harm alleged is a 8 seizure lacking probable cause, it is unclear why a plaintiff would have to show that 9 the police acted with malice.

10
11 Gallo, 161 F.3d at 222 n.6.

12
13 However, in other post-Albright cases the Court of Appeals has stated that Section 1983
14 plaintiffs must establish not only a specific constitutional violation but also the common-law
15 elements for malicious prosecution.²⁴⁹

²⁴⁹ The Court of Appeals applied the common-law elements in Hilfirty v. Shipman, 91 F.3d 573, 579 (3d Cir. 1996) (“In order to state a prima facie case for a section 1983 claim of malicious prosecution, the plaintiff must establish the elements of the common law tort as it has developed over time.”). However, the Hilfirty court did not mention Albright, so Hilfirty does not shed light on the test that should apply post-Albright. But see Nawrocki v. Tp. of Coolbaugh, 34 Fed. Appx. 832, 837 (3d Cir. April 8, 2002) (nonprecedential opinion) (citing Hilfirty for the proposition that “Albright left standing” the requirement that Section 1983 plaintiffs establish the common-law elements).

In Merkle v. Upper Dublin School Dist., the Court of Appeals held that the district court had erred in failing to require proof of a Bill of Rights violation, but the Merkle majority did not appear to take issue with the district court’s assumption that the plaintiff must establish the common law malicious prosecution elements. See Merkle, 211 F.3d at 792; see also id. at 794 (“We believe that whether these defendants’ actions against Merkle were retaliatory is, for purposes of summary judgment, influenced by the strength of Merkle’s claim against them for common law malicious prosecution.”). With respect to the common law elements, the district court had held that the plaintiff had failed to show a lack of probable cause; the Court of Appeals majority disagreed, finding evidence of a lack of probable cause and of malicious intent. See Merkle, 211 F.3d at 791, 795-96.

4.13 Section 1983 – Malicious Prosecution

1 [A] plaintiff must show that: (1) the defendant initiated a criminal proceeding; (2)
2 the criminal proceeding ended in plaintiff's favor; (3) the proceeding was initiated
3 without probable cause; (4) the defendants acted maliciously or for a purpose other 4 than bringing the plaintiff to justice; and (5) the plaintiff suffered deprivation of 5 liberty consistent with the concept of seizure as a consequence of a legal 6 proceeding.

8 Camiolo v. State Farm Fire & Cas. Co., 334 F.3d 345, 362-63 (3d Cir. 2003) (quoting Estate of 9 Smith v. Marasco, 318 F.3d 497, 521 (3d Cir. 2003)); see also DiBella v. Borough of Beachwood,
10 407 F.3d 599, 601 (3d Cir. 2005).²⁵⁰

11
12 In 2009, the en banc Court of Appeals approved the approach that requires the plaintiff to 13 establish the common law elements. See Kossler v. Crisanti, 564 F.3d 181, 186 (3d Cir. 2009).
14 Thus, the discussion that follows considers each element in turn.

15
16 Initiation. Though post-Albright Third Circuit Court of Appeals cases have not focused on 17 this element, it seems appropriate to require the plaintiff to establish that the defendant was 18 involved in initiating the prosecution.

19
20 Where the relevant law enforcement policy is not to file charges unless the alleged crime 21 victim so requests and not to drop those charges without the alleged victim's permission, and where 22 the alleged victim acted under color of state law, the alleged victim can be sued for malicious
23 prosecution under Section 1983 if the requisite elements are present. See Merkle v. Upper Dublin
24 School Dist., 211 F.3d 782, 791 (3d Cir. 2000) (holding that "the School Defendants, not just the 25 Police Defendants, are responsible for Merkle's prosecution"); see also Gallo, 161 F.3d at 220 n.2
26 ("Decisions have 'recognized that a § 1983 malicious prosecution claim might be maintained 27 against one who furnished false information to, or concealed material information from,
28 prosecuting authorities'" (quoting 1A Martin A. Schwartz & John E. Kirklin, Section 1983

²⁵⁰ In a nonprecedential opinion, the Court of Appeals has questioned Marasco's statement: "Given that the twenty-three page opinion in Marasco contains but a one-paragraph discussion of the plaintiff's claim under § 1983, our quote may merely be dictum, still leaving uncertain what is required." Backof v. New Jersey State Police, 92 Fed. Appx. 852, 858 (3d Cir. Feb. 13, 2004). However, as to the lack-of-probable-cause requirement, Marasco's statement is a holding. See Marasco, 318 F.3d at 522 ("Because initiation of the proceeding without probable cause is an essential element of a malicious prosecution claim, summary judgment in favor of the defendants was appropriate on this claim."). Camiolo's holding, as well, concerned the lack-of-probable-cause element. See Camiolo, 334 F.3d at 363 ("Because Camiolo did not demonstrate that he was prosecuted without probable cause, the District Court appropriately concluded that his § 1983 malicious prosecution claim could not survive summary judgment.").

4.13 Section 1983 – Malicious Prosecution

1 Litigation, § 3.20, at 316 (3d ed. 1997).).

3 Favorable termination. Post-Albright, the Court of Appeals has continued to require
4 malicious prosecution plaintiffs to show favorable termination. See Donahue v. Gavin, 280 F.3d
5 371, 383 (3d Cir. 2002) (citing Heck, 512 U.S. at 484 and noting that “Heck was decided [soon]
6 after Albright”).

8 In Donahue the court held that entry of a nolle prosequi only counts as a favorable
9 termination when the circumstances of the entry indicate the plaintiff’s innocence. See Donahue, 10 280 F.3d at 383 (citing Restatement (Second) of Torts §§ 659 & 660 (1976)); see also Hilferty v.
11 Shipman, 91 F.3d 573, 575 (3d Cir. 1996) (“Because we find that Miller neither compromised with 12 the prosecution to obtain her grant of nolle prosequi nor formally accepted the nolle prosequi in 13 exchange for a release of future civil claims, we conclude that the underlying proceeding 14 terminated in her favor.”). Resolution of a criminal case under Pennsylvania’s Accelerated 15 Rehabilitation Disposition program “is not a favorable termination under Heck.” Gilles v. Davis, 16 427 F.3d 197, 211 (3d Cir. 2005).²⁵¹

17
18 “[T]he favorable termination of some but not all individual charges does not necessarily 19 establish the favorable termination of the criminal proceeding as a whole. Rather ... , upon 20 examination of the entire criminal proceeding, the judgment must indicate the plaintiff’s innocence
21 of the alleged misconduct underlying the offenses charged.” Kossler v. Crisanti, 564 F.3d 181, 22 188 (3d Cir. 2009) (en banc); see also id. at 189 (holding on the specific facts of the case that 23 plaintiff’s “acquittal on the aggravated assault and public intoxication charges cannot be divorced 24 from his simultaneous conviction for disorderly conduct when all three charges arose from the 25 same course of conduct”). The Kossler majority stressed the fact-intensive nature of this inquiry 26 and left “for another day the establishment of universal contours of when a criminal proceeding 27 which includes both an acquittal (or dismissal) and a conviction constitutes a termination in the 28 plaintiff’s favor.” Id. at 192. A Pennsylvania Superior Court order vacating a judgment of sentence
29 without imposing any unfavorable conditions or burdens on the defendant constitutes a favorable 30 termination. Bronowicz v. Allegheny County, 804 F.3d 338, 347-48 (3d Cir. 2015) (distinguishing 31 Kossler and Gilles because, unlike in those cases, the Superior Court order did not imply that the 32 sentence imposed was valid, and explaining that the requirement that the prior outcome indicate 33 innocence does not call for magic words but rather directs the inquiry to the purpose of the 34 favorable termination rule: avoiding conflicting resolutions in the criminal case and the § 1983
35 case).

²⁵¹ The relevant claim in Gilles asserted a First Amendment violation and did not sound in malicious prosecution, see Gilles, 427 F.3d at 203, but the Court of Appeals found Heck’s reasoning “equally applicable” to the First Amendment claim and thus applied Heck’s favorable-termination requirement, id. at 209.

4.13 Section 1983 – Malicious Prosecution

1 Lack of probable cause. “Under § 1983, false arrest, false imprisonment, and malicious
2 prosecution claims require a showing that the arrest, physical restraint, or prosecution was initiated
3 without probable cause.” Pulice v. Enciso, 39 Fed. Appx. 692, 696 (3d Cir. July 17, 2002)
4 (nonprecedential opinion); see also Wright v. City of Philadelphia, 409 F.3d 595, 604 (3d Cir.
5 2005) (“Wright bases her malicious prosecution claim on alleged Fourth Amendment violations
6 arising from her arrest and prosecution. To prevail on this claim, she must show that the officers 7 lacked probable cause to arrest her.”).

9 In some cases, a finding of probable cause for one among multiple charges will foreclose
10 a malicious prosecution claim with respect to any of the charges. Thus, in Wright, the decision 11 that there was probable cause to arrest the plaintiff for criminal trespass “dispose[d] of her 12 malicious prosecution claims with respect to all of the charges brought against her, including the 13 burglary.” Wright, 409 F.3d at 604. But Wright does not “‘insulate’ law enforcement officers
14 from liability for malicious prosecution in all cases in which they had probable cause for the arrest
15 of the plaintiff on any one charge.” Johnson v. Knorr, 477 F.3d 75, 83 (3d Cir. 2007). Otherwise, 16 “an officer with probable cause as to a lesser offense could tack on more serious, unfounded
17 charges which would support a high bail or a lengthy detention, knowing that the probable cause 18 on the lesser offense would insulate him from liability for malicious prosecution on the other 19 offenses.” Johnson, 477 F.3d at 84 (quoting Posr v. Doherty, 944 F.2d 91, 100 (2d Cir.1991)).
20 Under Johnson, the court must analyze probable cause with respect to each charge that was brought 21 against the plaintiff. See id. at 85. Johnson distinguished Wright by scrutinizing the duration and 22 nature of the defendants’ alleged conduct: In Wright, the defendants’ “involvement apparently 23 ended at the time of the arrest,” whereas the plaintiff in Johnson alleged that the defendant’s 24 involvement “lasted beyond the issuing of an affidavit of probable cause for his arrest and the 25 arrest itself” and that the defendant “intentionally and fraudulently fabricated the charges against 26 him,” leading to the prosecution. Johnson, 477 F.3d at 84. If a plaintiff establishes that the facts
27 of the case warrant application of Johnson’s rule rather than Wright’s,²⁵² it apparently is still open

²⁵² In Startzell v. City of Philadelphia, 533 F.3d 183 (3d Cir. 2008), the Court of Appeals concluded that the district court properly held on summary judgment that there was probable cause to arrest the plaintiffs for disorderly conduct. On this basis the panel majority affirmed the grant of summary judgment dismissing Fourth Amendment claims for false arrest and malicious prosecution. In a footnote, the Court of Appeals stated that it “need not address whether there was probable cause with respect to the remaining charges – failure to disperse and obstructing a public passage – for the establishment of probable cause as to any one charge is sufficient to defeat Appellants’ Fourth Amendment claims. Cf. Johnson, 477 F.3d at 82 n. 9, 84-85 (applying this rule to malicious prosecution claim only where the circumstances leading to the arrest and prosecution are intertwined).” Startzell, 533 F.3d at 204 n.14. See also Reedy v. Evanson, 615 F.3d 197, 211 (3d Cir. 2010) (in case involving, inter alia, unlawful seizure, false imprisonment and malicious prosecution claims, stating in dictum that “[p]robable cause need only exist as to

4.13 Section 1983 – Malicious Prosecution

1 to the defendant to argue that “the prosecution for the additional charges for which there might not
2 have been probable cause in no way resulted in additional restrictions on [the plaintiff’s] liberty
3 beyond those attributable to the prosecution on the ... charges for which there was probable cause.”
4 Id. at 86.

6 The en banc Court of Appeals has “note[d] the considerable tension that exists between our 7 treatment of the probable cause element in Johnson and our treatment of that element in the earlier
8 case of Wright.” Kossler, 564 F.3d at 193. Though the Kossler court noted that if Wright and 9 Johnson were “in unavoidable conflict” the earlier of the two precedents would control, Kossler,
10 564 F.3d at 194 n.8, the Kossler court did not conclude that such an unavoidable conflict exists.
11 Rather, the Kossler court indicated that courts should, when necessary, “wrestle” with the question 12 of which precedent – Wright or Johnson – governs in a given case, bearing in mind the 13 “fact-intensive” nature of the inquiry. Kossler, 564 F.3d at 194.

14
15 “[T]he question of probable cause in a section 1983 damage suit is one for the jury.”
16 Montgomery v. De Simone, 159 F.3d 120, 124 (3d Cir. 1998) (discussing Section 1983 claim for 17 malicious prosecution). In Losch v. Borough of Parkesburg, 736 F.2d 903, 909 (3d Cir. 1984), the 18 Court of Appeals stated that “defendants bear the burden at trial of proving the defense of good 19 faith and probable cause” with respect to a malicious prosecution claim. However, cases such as 20 DiBella, Camiolo and Marasco (none of which cites Losch) list the absence of probable cause as [one of the] offense[s] that could be charged under the circumstances” (quoting Barna v. City of Perth Amboy, 42 F.3d 809, 819 (3d Cir. 1994)).

In Pitts v. Delaware, 646 F.3d 151 (3d Cir. 2011), the jury found for the plaintiff on his claims of race discrimination and illegal seizure but found for the defendant on the plaintiff’s claims for false arrest and malicious prosecution, see id. at 154. In the course of explaining why evidence of a lack of probable cause for one of the charges against the plaintiff would support the jury’s finding of race discrimination, the Court of Appeals noted that a jury finding that probable cause for that charge was absent would not have been impermissibly inconsistent with the jury's verdict in favor of [the defendant] Spence on Pitts' malicious prosecution claim. Neither the instructions nor the general verdict form required the jury to conclude that every charge Spence brought against Pitts was supported by probable cause. Thus, the jury could have concluded that any one of the six charges brought against Pitts was supported by probable cause to find in favor of Spence on Pitts' malicious prosecution claim.

Pitts, 646 F.3d at 158 n.4.

4.13 Section 1983 – Malicious Prosecution

1 an element of the malicious prosecution claim, and thus indicate that the plaintiff has the burden
2 of proof on that element. See, e.g., Camiolo, 334 F.3d at 363 (holding that malicious prosecution
3 claim was properly dismissed due to plaintiff’s inability to show lack of probable cause); Marasco,
4 318 F.3d at 522 (“Because initiation of the proceeding without probable cause is an essential
5 element of a malicious prosecution claim, summary judgment in favor of the defendants was 6 appropriate on this claim.”). More recently, the Court of Appeals has stated explicitly that the 7 malicious prosecution plaintiff has the burden to show lack of probable cause. See Johnson, 477
8 F.3d at 86 (“[O]n the remand Johnson will have the burden to ‘show that the criminal action was 9 begun without probable cause for charging the crime the first place.’ Hartman v. Moore ..., 126
10 S.Ct. 1695, 1702 (2006).”). Accordingly, Instruction 4.13 assigns to the plaintiff the burden of 11 proving the absence of probable cause. Compare Comment 4.12.2 (discussing burden of proof as 12 to probable cause with respect to false arrest claims stemming from warrantless arrests).
13

14 “[A] grand jury indictment or presentment constitutes prima facie evidence of probable 15 cause to prosecute, but . . . this prima facie evidence may be rebutted by evidence that the 16 presentment was procured by fraud, perjury or other corrupt means.” Camiolo, 334 F.3d at 363
17 (quoting Rose, 871 F.2d at 353).²⁵³ In Halsey v. Pfeiffer, 750 F.3d 273 (3d Cir. 2014), a case

²⁵³ The defendant might also argue that a grand jury indictment breaks the chain of causation. The Court of Appeals has explained the concept of superseding causes:

[I]n situations in which a judicial officer or other independent intermediary applies the correct governing law and procedures but reaches an erroneous conclusion because he or she is misled in some manner as to the relevant facts, the causal chain is not broken and liability may be imposed upon those involved in making the misrepresentations or omissions. . . . However, . . . where . . . the judicial officer is provided with the appropriate facts to adjudicate the proceeding but fails to properly apply the governing law and procedures, such error must be held to be a superseding cause, breaking the chain of causation for purposes of § 1983 and Bivens liability.

Egervary v. Young, 366 F.3d 238, 250-51 (3d Cir. 2004). Though Egervary involved a judge’s decision, rather than a grand jury’s, the rationale of Egervary seems equally applicable to the grand jury context. (For a discussion of the possibility that Supreme Court precedents may limit the application of the superseding cause principle with respect to the issuance of warrants, see supra Instruction 4.12 cmt.) In any event, assuming that the supervening cause doctrine applies to grand jury indictments, its net effect seems similar to that of the lack-of-probable-cause requirement: Where a grand jury has indicted the plaintiff, the plaintiff must present evidence that the indictment was obtained through misrepresentations or other corrupt means. See also Halsey v. Pfeiffer, 750 F.3d 273 (3d Cir. 2014) (holding that a prosecutor’s decision to charge

1 involving a claim that police officers fabricated evidence that led not only to indictment but 2 conviction, the court of appeals held that a reasonable jury could find that there would have been 3 no probable cause without the fabricated evidence. Compare Montgomery, 159 F.3d at 125
4 (holding “that the Restatement’s rule that an overturned municipal conviction presumptively
5 establish[es] probable cause contravenes the policies underlying the Civil Rights Act and therefore 6 does not apply to a section 1983 malicious prosecution action”).

8 Where a claim exists against a complaining witness for that person’s role in the alleged 9 malicious prosecution of the plaintiff, the factfinder should perform a separate probable cause
10 inquiry concerning the complaining witness. See Merkle, 211 F.3d at 794 (“As instigators of the 11 arrest ... it is possible that the District and Brown were in possession of additional information, not 12 provided to Detective Hahn, that would negate any probable cause they may otherwise have had 13 to prosecute Merkle.”).

14
15 Malice or other improper purpose. It might be argued that a showing of malice should not 16 be required where the plaintiff’s Section 1983 claim is premised on a Fourth Amendment violation.
17 See Brooks v. City of Winston-Salem, N.C., 85 F.3d 178, 184 n.5 (4th Cir. 1996) (noting that “the 18 reasonableness of a seizure under the Fourth Amendment should be analyzed from an objective
19 perspective” and thus that “the subjective state of mind of the defendant, whether good faith or ill
20 will, is irrelevant in this context”). However, the Third Circuit Court of Appeals has listed malice
21 as an element of Section 1983 malicious prosecution claims premised on Fourth Amendment
22 violations. See Camiolo, 334 F.3d at 362-63; Marasco, 318 F.3d at 521.²⁵⁴

24 Pre-Albright caselaw defined the malice element “as either ill will in the sense of spite,
25 lack of belief by the actor himself in the propriety of the prosecution, or its use for an extraneous
26 improper purpose.” Lee v. Mihalich, 847 F.2d 66, 70 (3d Cir. 1988). Following Pennsylvania law, 27 the Court of Appeals held in another pre-Albright case that “[m]alice may be inferred from the 28 absence of probable cause.” Lippay v. Christos, 996 F.2d 1490, 1502 (3d Cir. 1993); cf. Trabal v.
29 Wells Fargo Armored Service Corp., 269 F.3d 243, 248 (3d Cir. 2001) (applying New Jersey law 30 in a malicious prosecution case arising in diversity).

did not necessarily break the causal chain because a reasonable jury could find that the prosecutor would not have filed charges in the absence of evidence fabricated by police officers).

²⁵⁴ Admittedly, both Marasco and Camiolo were decided based upon the lack-of-probable-cause element, so the statements in those cases concerning malice do not constitute holdings. But more recently the court of appeals affirmed the dismissal of a Section 1983 malicious prosecution claim based on “insufficient evidence of malice.” McKenna v. City of Philadelphia, 582 F.3d 447, 461-62 (3d Cir. 2009).

4.13 Section 1983 – Malicious Prosecution

1 The Heck v. Humphrey bar. A convicted prisoner cannot proceed with a Section 1983
2 claim challenging the constitutionality of the conviction pursuant to which the plaintiff is in 3 custody, unless the conviction has been reversed or otherwise invalidated.²⁵⁵ See Heck v.
4 Humphrey, 512 U.S. 477, 486-87 (1994).²⁵⁶ Four Justices, concurring in the judgment, argued that ²⁵⁵ The Court of Appeals has indicated that the Heck bar is conceptually distinct from the favorable-termination element of a Section 1983 claim. See Kossler, 564 F.3d at 190 n.6 (stating that the court did “not need to apply Heck's test in the present case” because the plaintiff had in any event failed to establish the common law element of favorable termination). Despite this assertion of conceptual distinctiveness, the court of appeals has relied on both Kossler (applying the common law rule) and Gilles (applying the Heck bar) interchangeably in applying the Heck bar. Bronowicz v. Allegheny County, 804 F.3d 338, 347-48 (3d Cir. 2015).

A dismissal predicated on Heck should be without prejudice. Curry v. Yachera, 835 F.3d 373, 379 (3d Cir. 2016). A nolo contendere plea counts as a conviction for Heck purposes. Id. at 378.

²⁵⁶ See also Skinner v. Switzer, 131 S. Ct. 1289, 1298 (2011) (holding that plaintiff inmate could pursue claim for DNA testing under Section 1983 because success in that suit “would not ‘necessarily imply’ the invalidity of his conviction”); Long v. Atlantic City Police Dep’t, 670 F.3d 436, 438, 447 (3d Cir. 2012) (holding that inmate’s damages claim alleging that law enforcement defendants “conspired to obtain a capital murder conviction against him by knowingly presenting false evidence at his trial, and deliberately preventing him from obtaining DNA testing that would prove his innocence” was distinguishable from Skinner and “plainly barred by Heck”); Leamer v. Fauver, 288 F.3d 532, 542 (3d Cir. 2002) (“[W]henver the challenge ultimately attacks the ‘core of habeas’ --the validity of the continued conviction or the fact or length of the sentence--a challenge, however denominated and regardless of the relief sought, must be brought by way of a habeas corpus petition.”); Torres v. Fauver, 292 F.3d 141, 143 (3d Cir. 2002) (“[T]he favorable termination rule does not apply to claims that implicate only the conditions, and not the fact or duration, of a prisoner's incarceration.”); McGee v. Martinez, 627 F.3d 933, 937 (3d Cir. 2010) (“The [Inmate Financial Responsibility Plan] payment schedule and the sanctions imposed for noncompliance are part of the execution of McGee's sentence. Accordingly we hold that the claim that they are illegal and invalid falls under the rubric of a § 2241 habeas petition.”).

The Third Circuit had previously reasoned that the Heck rationale extends to pending prosecutions: “[A] claim that, if successful, would necessarily imply the invalidity of a conviction on a pending criminal charge is not cognizable under § 1983.” Smith v. Holtz, 87 F.3d 108, 113 (3d Cir. 1996). However, the Supreme Court more recently rejected the assertion “that an action which would impugn an anticipated future conviction cannot be brought until that

1 this favorable-termination requirement should not apply to plaintiffs who are not in custody. See
2 id. at 503 (Souter, J., joined by Blackmun, Stevens, & O’Connor, JJ., concurring in the judgment).
3 The Heck majority rejected that argument, albeit in dicta. See id. at 490 n.10. Four years later, in 4 Spencer v. Kemna, five Justices stated that Heck’s requirement of favorable termination does not 5 apply when a plaintiff is out of custody.²⁵⁷ The Court of Appeals, however, has indicated that it is 6 not at liberty to follow the suggestion made by those Justices.²⁵⁸ conviction occurs and is set aside.” Wallace v. Kato, 127 S.Ct. 1091, 1098 (2007). Under Wallace, prior to the defendant’s actual conviction Heck bars neither the accrual of a claim nor the running of the limitations period. Rather, “[i]f a plaintiff files a false arrest claim before he has been convicted (or files any other claim related to rulings that will likely be made in a pending or anticipated criminal trial), it is within the power of the district court, and in accord with common practice, to stay the civil action until the criminal case or the likelihood of a criminal case is ended.... If the plaintiff is ultimately convicted, and if the stayed civil suit would impugn that conviction, Heck will require dismissal; otherwise, the civil action will proceed, absent some other bar to suit.” Wallace, 127 S. Ct. at 1098.

²⁵⁷ See Spencer v. Kemna, 523 U.S. 1, 21 (1998) (Souter, J., joined by O’Connor, Ginsburg & Breyer, JJ., concurring) (“[A] former prisoner, no longer ‘in custody,’ may bring a § 1983 action establishing the unconstitutionality of a conviction or confinement without being bound to satisfy a favorable termination requirement that it would be impossible as a matter of law for him to satisfy.”); id. at 25 n.8 (Stevens, J., dissenting) (“Given the Court’s holding that petitioner does not have a remedy under the habeas statute, it is perfectly clear, as Justice SOUTER explains, that he may bring an action under 42 U.S.C. § 1983.”).

²⁵⁸ The Court of Appeals explained:

We recognize that concurring and dissenting opinions in Spencer v. Kemna ... question the applicability of Heck to an individual, such as Petit, who has no recourse under the habeas statute.... But these opinions do not affect our conclusion that Heck applies to Petit’s claims. We doubt that Heck has been undermined, but to the extent its continued validity has been called into question, we join on this point, our sister courts of appeals for the First and Fifth Circuits in following the Supreme Court’s admonition “to lower federal courts to follow its directly applicable precedent, even if that precedent appears weakened by pronouncements in its subsequent decisions, and to leave to the Court ‘the prerogative of overruling its own decisions.’” Figueroa v. Rivera, 147 F.3d 77, 81 n. 3 (1st Cir. 1998) (citing Agostini v. Felton, 521 U.S. 203, 237 (1997)); see Randell v. Johnson, 227 F.3d 300, 301- 02 (5th Cir. 2000).

4.13 Section 1983 – Malicious Prosecution

1 Plaintiff’s guilt as a defense. “Even if the plaintiff in malicious prosecution can show that 2 the defendant acted maliciously and without probable cause in instituting a prosecution, it is always 3 open to the defendant to escape liability by showing in the malicious prosecution suit itself that 4 the plaintiff was in fact guilty of the offense with which he was charged.” Hector v. Watt, 235
5 F.3d 154, 156 (3d Cir. 2000), as amended (Jan. 26, 2001) (quoting W. Keeton et al., Prosser &
6 Keeton on the Law of Torts 885 (5th ed. 1984) (citing Restatement (Second) of Torts § 657
7 (1977))). “This requirement can bar recovery even when the plaintiff was acquitted in the prior 8 criminal proceedings, for a verdict of not guilty only establishes that there was not proof beyond a 9 reasonable doubt.” Hector, 235 F.3d at 156. It appears that the defendant would have the burden
10 of proof on this issue by a preponderance of the evidence. See Restatement (Second) of Torts §
11 657 cmt. b.²⁵⁹

12
13 Limits on types of damages. The plaintiff’s choice of constitutional violation upon which 14 to ground the malicious prosecution claim may limit the types of damages available. In particular,
15 “damages for post-conviction injuries are not within the purview of the Fourth Amendment.”
16 Donahue, 280 F.3d at 382. Thus, a plaintiff who premises a malicious prosecution claim on a 17 seizure in violation of the Fourth Amendment must “distinguish between damages that may have 18 been caused by that ‘seizure’” – which are recoverable on that claim – and “damages that are the 19 result of his trial, conviction and sentence” – which are not. Id.; see also DiBella v. Borough of 20 Beachwood, 407 F.3d 599, 603 (3d Cir. 2005) (“[T]he Fourth Amendment does not extend beyond 21 the period of pretrial restrictions.”).

22
23 Section 1983 claim for abuse of process. Prior to Albright, the Court of Appeals recognized
24 a Section 1983 claim for abuse of process. “In contrast to a section 1983 claim for malicious
25 prosecution, a section 1983 claim for malicious abuse of process lies where ‘prosecution is initiated
26 legitimately and thereafter is used for a purpose other than that intended by the law.’” Rose, 871
27 F.2d at 350 n.17 (quoting Jennings v. Shuman, 567 F.2d 1213, 1217 (3d Cir.1977)). Favorable
28 termination is not an element of a Section 1983 abuse of process claim. See Rose, 871 F.2d at 351.
29 Nor is a lack of probable cause. See Jennings, 567 F.2d at 1219. “To prove abuse of process, 30 plaintiffs must prove three elements: (1) an abuse or perversion of process already initiated (2)
31 with some unlawful or ulterior purpose, and (3) harm to the plaintiffs as a result.” Godshalk v.
32 Borough of Bangor, 2004 WL 999546, at *13 (E.D. Pa. May 5, 2004).

Gilles v. Davis, 427 F.3d 197, 209-10 (3d Cir. 2005).

²⁵⁹ However, in a nonprecedential opinion, the Court of Appeals has read Hector to assign the burden of proof on this issue to the plaintiff. See Steele v. City of Erie, 113 Fed. Appx. 456, 459 (3d Cir. Oct. 20, 2004) (“In Hector . . . , we held that a plaintiff claiming malicious prosecution must prove actual innocence as an element of his prima facie case.”).

4.13 Section 1983 – Malicious Prosecution

1 It seems clear that, post-Albright, the plaintiff must establish a constitutional violation (not 2 sounding in substantive due process) in order to prevail on a Section 1983 claim for abuse of 3 process. It may be possible for the plaintiff to satisfy this requirement by showing a violation of 4 procedural due process. See Jennings, 567 F.2d at 1220 (“An abuse of process is by definition a
5 denial of procedural due process.”);²⁶⁰ Godshalk, 2004 WL 999546, at *13 (accepting argument 6 that abuse of process can constitute denial of procedural due process).

8 Section 1983 claim for conspiracy to prosecute maliciously. The Court of Appeals has 9 recognized a Section 1983 claim for conspiracy to engage in a malicious prosecution. See Rose, 10 871 F.2d at 352 (reversing district court’s dismissal of malicious prosecution conspiracy claims).
11

12 Fourteenth Amendment stand-alone claim under section 1983 for fabrication of evidence.
13 In Halsey v. Pfeiffer, 750 F.3d 273 (3d Cir. 2014), the court of appeals held that even if a Fourth
14 Amendment malicious prosecution claim were not viable, a Fourteenth Amendment stand-alone
15 claim for fabrication of evidence would be. It rejected the argument that “evidence-fabrication 16 claims must be tied to malicious prosecution cases,” concluding that “no sensible concept of 17 ordered liberty is consistent with law enforcement cooking up its own evidence.” Id. at 293. It
18 noted with approval an opinion of the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit that characterized jury 19 instructions as “deeply flawed” for limiting the jury’s use of fabricated evidence to evaluate a 20 Fourth Amendment malicious prosecution claim without allowing a finding of a Fourteenth 21 Amendment due process violation. Pursuant to Halsey, a court should not foreclose a Fourteenth
22 Amendment stand-alone claim for fabrication of evidence even if a Fourth Amendment malicious 23 prosecution claim fails (for example) because of the existence of probable cause even without the 24 fabricated evidence. Such a claim is available even if the criminal defendant is acquitted, “if there 25 is a reasonable likelihood that, absent the fabricated evidence, the defendant would not have been 26 criminally charged.” Black v. Montgomery County, 835 F.3d 358, 370 (3d Cir. 2016).

²⁶⁰ The abuse of process alleged by the plaintiff in Jennings involved the use of the prosecution as leverage for an extortion scheme. Jennings, 567 F.2d at 1220 (“The goal of that conspiracy was extortion, to be accomplished by bringing a prosecution against him without probable cause and for an improper purpose.”).

1 4.13.1 Section 1983 – Burdens of Proof in Civil and Criminal Cases

3 Model

5 As you know, [plaintiff’s] claims in this case relate to [his/her] [arrest] [prosecution] for 6 the crime of [describe crime].

8 [At various points in a criminal case,] the government must meet certain requirements in 9 order to [stop, arrest, and ultimately] convict a person for a crime. It is important to distinguish 10 between those requirements and the requirements of proof in this civil case.

11
12 [In order to “stop” a person, a police officer must have a “reasonable suspicion” that the 13 person they stop has committed, is committing, or is about to commit a crime. There must be 14 specific facts that, taken together with the rational inferences from those facts, reasonably warrant 15 the stop.]

17 [In order to arrest a person, the police must have probable cause to believe the person
18 committed a crime. Probable cause requires more than mere suspicion; however, it does not 19 require that the officer have evidence sufficient to prove guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. The 20 standard of probable cause represents a balance between the individual’s right to liberty and the 21 government’s duty to control crime. Because police officers often confront ambiguous situations, 22 room must be allowed for some mistakes on their part. But the mistakes must be those of 23 reasonable officers.]

24
25 In order for a jury to convict a person of a crime, the government must prove the person’s
26 guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. Proof beyond a reasonable doubt is proof that leaves the jury
27 firmly convinced of the defendant’s guilt. If a jury in a criminal case thinks there is a real 28 possibility that the defendant is not guilty, the jury must give the defendant the benefit of the doubt 29 and find [him/her] not guilty.

30
31 [Thus, the fact that the jury found [plaintiff] not guilty in the criminal trial does not 32 necessarily indicate that the jury in the criminal trial found [plaintiff] innocent; it indicates only 33 that the government failed to prove [plaintiff] guilty beyond a reasonable doubt.]

34
35 [The existence of probable cause to make an arrest is evaluated in light of the facts and 36 circumstances available to the police officer at the time. And probable cause is a less demanding 37 standard than guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. Thus, the fact that the jury found [plaintiff] not 38 guilty in the criminal trial does not indicate whether or not the police had probable cause to arrest
39 [plaintiff].]

4.13.1 Section 1983 – Burdens of Proof in Civil and Criminal Cases

1 [Unlike the prior criminal trial, this is a civil case. [Plaintiff] has the burden of proving 2 [his/her] case by the preponderance of the evidence. That means [plaintiff] has to prove to you, in 3 light of all the evidence, that what [he/she] claims is more likely so than not so. In other words, if 4 you were to put the evidence favorable to [plaintiff] and the evidence favorable to [defendant] on 5 opposite sides of the scales, [plaintiff] would have to make the scales tip somewhat on [his/her]
6 side. If [plaintiff] fails to meet this burden, the verdict must be for [defendant]. Notice that the 7 preponderance-of-the-evidence standard, which [plaintiff] must meet in this case, is not as hard to 8 meet as the beyond-a-reasonable-doubt standard, which the government must meet in a criminal
9 case.]

14 When this instruction is given, the last sentence of General Instruction 1.10 should be 15 omitted.

4.14 Section 1983 – State-created Danger

1 concerns whether it is possible to draw a direct enough connection between [defendant’s] conduct
2 and [the harm at issue] [describe harm]. To consider the question of directness, you should look 3 at the chain of events that led to [the harm at issue] [describe harm], and you should consider where 4 [defendant’s] conduct fits within that chain of events, and whether that conduct can be said to be 5 a fairly direct cause of [the harm at issue] [describe harm]. In appropriate cases, the sufficient 6 directness requirement can be met even if some other action or event comes between the 7 defendant’s conduct and the harm to the plaintiff.
8

9 [[For cases in which the requisite level of culpability is subjective deliberate
10 indifference:]²⁶⁴ The second of these four elements requires [plaintiff] to show that [defendant]
11 acted with deliberate indifference. To show that [defendant] was deliberately indifferent, 12 [plaintiff] must show that [defendant] knew that there was a strong likelihood of harm to [plaintiff],
13 and that [defendant] disregarded that risk by failing to take reasonable measures to address it.
14 [Plaintiff] must show that [defendant] actually knew of the risk. If [plaintiff] proves that the risk
15 of harm was obvious, you are entitled to infer from the obviousness of the risk that [defendant]
16 knew of the risk. [However, [defendant] claims that even if there was an obvious risk, [he/she] 17 was unaware of that risk. If you find that [defendant] was unaware of the risk,²⁶⁵ then you must 18 find that [he/she] was not deliberately indifferent.]]
19

20 [For cases in which the requisite level of culpability is objective deliberate
21 indifference, see Comment for discussion of the second element.]
22

23 [[For cases in which the requisite level of culpability is gross negligence or 24 arbitrariness that shocks the conscience:]²⁶⁶ The second of these four elements requires 25 [plaintiff] to show that [defendant] acted with conscious disregard of a great risk of serious harm.

²⁶⁴ This option can be used if the court concludes that the requisite level of culpability is subjective deliberate indifference. If the court concludes that the appropriate standard is objective deliberate indifference, a different formulation would be necessary. The Court of Appeals has not yet determined definitively which standard is appropriate in state-created danger cases. See Comment.

²⁶⁵ It is unclear who has the burden of proof with respect to a defendant’s claim of lack of awareness of an obvious risk. See Comment 4.11.1.

²⁶⁶ This option is designed for use in cases where the requisite level of culpability is gross negligence or arbitrariness that shocks the conscience. See Comment (discussing the explanation of this standard provided in Ziccardi v. City of Philadelphia, 288 F.3d 57 (3d Cir. 2002)).

4.14 Section 1983 – State-created Danger

1 It is not enough to show that [defendant] was careless or reckless. On the other hand, [plaintiff]
2 need not show that [defendant] acted with the purpose of causing harm. Rather, [plaintiff] must 3 show that [defendant] knew there was a great risk of serious harm, and that [defendant] consciously
4 disregarded that risk.]

6 The third of these four elements requires [plaintiff] to show that there was some type of 7 relationship between [defendant] and [plaintiff] that distinguished [plaintiff] from the public at 8 large. It is not enough to show that [defendant’s] conduct created a risk to the general public.
9 Instead, [plaintiff] must show that [defendant’s] conduct created a foreseeable risk to [plaintiff] [a 10 definable group of people including [plaintiff]]²⁶⁷.

11 12 Comment

13
14 To recover on a theory of state-created danger,²⁶⁸ “a plaintiff must prove four elements: (1) 15 the harm ultimately caused was foreseeable and fairly direct;” (2) the defendant possessed the 16 requisite degree of culpable intent; “(3) there existed some relationship between the state and the 17 plaintiff; and (4) the state actors used their authority to create an opportunity that otherwise would 18 not have existed” for harm to occur. Estate of Smith v. Marasco, 318 F.3d 497, 506 (3d Cir. 2003).

19
20 These elements appear to overlap significantly. Though each element is discussed more 21 fully below, the following rough summary may help to demonstrate the overlap: The first element, 22 obviously, focuses on foreseeability. The second element, culpable intent, is formulated by 23 weighing both the foreseeability of the harm and the defendant’s opportunity to reflect on that risk 24 of harm. The third element, the relationship between the state and the plaintiff, is designed to 25 eliminate claims arising merely from a risk to the public at large; this element focuses on whether 26 the plaintiff is a member of a discrete group whom the defendant subjected to a foreseeable risk.
27 The fourth element again returns to the question of foreseeability and risk, this time by asking 28 whether the defendant subjected the plaintiff to an increased risk of harm. The overlap among 29 these elements shows their interconnected nature; but by elaborating this four-part test for liability,

²⁶⁷ Use the second of these options in cases where the plaintiff claims that the defendant’s conduct created a risk to a group of which plaintiff was a member. In such cases, it may be advisable to explain what “a definable group of people” means in the context of the case.

²⁶⁸ Citing County of Sacramento v. Lewis, 523 U.S. 833 (1998), the court of appeals held in Betts v. New Castle Youth Development Center, 621 F.3d 249 (3d Cir. 2010), that a plaintiff could not pursue a state-created danger claim based on the same facts as his Eighth Amendment claim, see id. at 260-61 (“Because these allegations fit squarely within the Eighth Amendment’s prohibition on cruel and unusual punishment, we hold that the more-specific-provision rule forecloses Betts’s substantive due process claims”).

4.14 Section 1983 – State-created Danger

1 the Court of Appeals has indicated that each of the four elements adds something important to the 2 analysis. The model therefore enumerates each element and attempts to explain its significance in 3 terms that distinguish it from the others.

5 The first element. “The first element . . . requires that the harm ultimately caused was a 6 foreseeable and a fairly direct result of the state's actions.” Morse v. Lower Merion School Dist., 7 132 F.3d 902, 908 (3d Cir. 1997) (holding “that defendants . . . could not have foreseen that 8 allowing construction workers to use an unlocked back entrance for access to the school building 9 would result in the murderous act of a mentally unstable third party, and that the tragic harm which 10 ultimately befell Diane Morse was too attenuated from defendants' actions to support liability”).
11 Though the concepts of foreseeability and directness may largely overlap, they do express 12 somewhat distinct concepts, both of which presumably should be conveyed to the jury.
13

14 Foreseeability, of course, concerns whether the defendant should have foreseen the harm 15 at issue. See, e.g., Marasco, 318 F.3d at 508 (“[T]he Smiths have presented sufficient evidence to 16 allow a jury to find that at least some of the officers were aware of Smith's condition and should 17 have foreseen that he might flee and suffer adverse medical consequences when SERT was 18 activated.”); Phillips v. County of Allegheny, 515 F.3d 224, 237 (3d Cir. 2008) (“We have never 19 held that to establish foreseeability, a plaintiff must allege that the person who caused the harm
20 had a ‘history of violence.’ Indeed, these types of cases often come from unexpected or impulsive
21 actions which ultimately cause serious harm.”). See also L.R. v. School District of Philadelphia, 22 836 F.3d 235, 245 (3d Cir. 2016) (“We think the risk of harm in releasing a five-year-old child to 23 a complete stranger was obvious.”).
24

25 Directness concerns whether the chain of causation is too attenuated for liability to attach.
26 For example, in Morse, the Court of Appeals held both that the defendants could not have foreseen
27 that leaving a back door unlocked would result in the murder of someone in the school building 28 (i.e., that foreseeability was lacking), and that “[t]he causation, if any, is too attenuated” (i.e., that 29 the harm was not a direct enough result of the defendant’s actions). Similarly, in Henry v. Erie,
30 728 F.3d 275, 285 (3d Cir. 2013), the Court of Appeals affirmed the dismissal of a complaint 31 alleging that state officials subsidized the rent at an apartment while failing to enforce housing 32 standards requiring smoke detectors and an alternative means of egress because such alleged 33 actions did not lead “fairly directly” to the fire that claimed the plaintiffs’ lives. Rather than being 34 “close in time and succession,” the alleged actions by the defendants were “separated from the 35 ultimate harm by a lengthy period of time and intervening forces and actions.” Id. Compare 36 Phillips, 515 F.3d at 240 (holding this element met where complaint’s allegations justified the 37 inference “that Michalski used the time, access and information given to him by the defendants to 38 plan an assault on Mark Phillips and Ferderbar”). See also L.R. v. School District of Philadelphia, 39 836 F.3d 235, 246 (3d Cir. 2016) (“Here, randomness and attenuation are not in play. [Defendant]
40 released Jane directly to the unidentified adult who sexually assaulted her the same day.”).

4.14 Section 1983 – State-created Danger

1 The second element. Prior to 1998, the Court of Appeals held that “[t]he second prong . . .
2 asks whether the state actor acted with willful disregard for or deliberate indifference to plaintiff’s
3 safety.” Morse, 132 F.3d at 910. “In other words, the state’s actions must evince a willingness to 4 ignore a foreseeable danger or risk.” Id. In County of Sacramento v. Lewis, 523 U.S. 833 (1998),
5 the Supreme Court held that a “shocks-the-conscience test” governs substantive due process claims
6 arising from high-speed chases, and that in the context of a high-speed chase that test requires “a 7 purpose to cause harm.” Id. at 854. The Court of Appeals has since made clear that state-created
8 danger claims require “a degree of culpability that shocks the conscience.” Bright v. Westmoreland
9 County, 443 F.3d 276, 281 (3d Cir. 2006).²⁶⁹ See also Morrow v. Balaski, 719 F.3d 160 (3d Cir.
10 2013) (en banc) (stating the second element as “a state actor acted with a degree of culpability that 11 shocks the conscience”); cf. Spady v. Bethlehem Area Sch. Dist., 800 F.3d 633, 638 (3d Cir. 2015) 12 (reciting the elements from pre-1998 cases, including that “the state actor acted in willful disregard 13 for the safety of the plaintiff”).

14
15 However, “the precise degree of wrongfulness required to reach the conscience-shocking
16 level depends on the circumstances of a particular case.” Marasco, 318 F.3d at 508. “The level
17 of culpability required to shock the conscience increases as the time state actors have to deliberate
18 decreases.” Sanford v. Stiles, 456 F.3d 298, 309 (3d Cir. 2006); see also, e.g., Walter v. Pike
19 County, Pa., 544 F.3d 182, 192-93 (3d Cir. 2008); L.R. v. School District of Philadelphia, 836
20 F.3d 235, 246 (3d Cir. 2016) (noting that “the appropriate culpability standard here is deliberate
21 indifference, since there is nothing to indicate that [defendant] faced circumstances requiring him 22 to make a quick decision”).

23
24 “For example, in the custodial situation of a prison, where forethought about an inmate’s 25 welfare is possible, deliberate indifference to a prisoner’s medical needs may be sufficiently ²⁶⁹ See also Marasco, 318 F.3d at 507 (noting that Miller v. City of Philadelphia, 174 F.3d 368, 374-75 (3d Cir. 1999) “suggested that the ‘shocks the conscience’ standard [applies] to all substantive due process cases”); Schieber v. City of Philadelphia, 320 F.3d 409, 419 (3d Cir. 2003) (opinion of Stapleton, J.) (“[N]egligence is not enough to shock the conscience under any circumstances. . . . [M]ore culpability is required to shock the conscience to the extent that state actors are required to act promptly and under pressure. Moreover, the same is true to the extent the responsibilities of the state actors require a judgment between competing, legitimate interests.”); id. at 423 (reversing denial of summary judgment to police officers sued by parents who alleged their daughter was murdered after officers responded to 911 call but failed to enter daughter’s apartment, “[b]ecause the record would not support a finding of more than negligence on the part of” the officers); see also id. at 423 (Nygaard, J., concurring) (stating that he did “not disagree with [Judge Stapleton’s] analysis as far as it goes” but that the crux of the case was the plaintiff’s failure to show an affirmative act on the part of the police).

4.14 Section 1983 – State-created Danger

1 shocking, while “[a] much higher fault standard is proper when a government official is acting 2 instantaneously and making pressured decisions without the ability to fully consider the risks.”
3 Marasco, 318 F.3d at 508 (quoting Miller, 174 F.3d at 375). Between the deliberate indifference 4 standard (appropriate to controlled environments where deliberation is practicable)²⁷⁰ and the 5 purpose to cause harm standard (applied to high-speed chases) is an intermediate standard –
6 “arbitrariness” – that governs in instances that present neither the urgency of a high-speed chase
7 nor a full opportunity for deliberate response.²⁷¹ See Miller, 174 F.3d at 375-77 & n.7 (where “a
8 social worker act[ed] to separate parent and child,” requiring “evidence of acts . . . that rose to a 9 level of arbitrariness that shocks the conscience”); see id. at 375-76 (stating the applicable standard
10 as “exceed[ing] both negligence and deliberate indifference, and reach[ing] a level of gross 11 negligence or arbitrariness that indeed ‘shocks the conscience’”).²⁷²

²⁷⁰ In Phillips, Michalski was suspended and then fired from his job as a 911 dispatcher. After his suspension, two of his former dispatcher colleagues gave him information that would help him to locate Phillips (Michalski’s ex-girlfriend’s new boyfriend). After being fired, Michalski told his former colleagues that he had nothing to live for and that his ex-girlfriend and Phillips would “pay for putting him in his present situation.” The dispatchers failed to contact Phillips, the ex-girlfriend, or the police departments of the areas in which those two people were located. Michalski then shot and killed his ex-girlfriend, her sister, and Phillips. Phillips, 515 F.3d at 228-29. The court of appeals held that the deliberate indifference standard applied to the dispatchers because they “had no information which would have placed them in a ‘hyperpressurized environment.’” Id. at 241.

²⁷¹ Dictum in Ye v. United States, 484 F.3d 634 (3d Cir. 2007), briefly discusses some but not all of the points along this spectrum. See id. at 638 n.2 (discussing “intent-to-harm,” “gross negligence,” and “gross recklessness” standards, but omitting to mention deliberate-indifference standard).

²⁷² Subsequently, however, in Nicini v. Morra, 212 F.3d 798 (3d Cir. 2000) (en banc), the Court of Appeals held that a family services worker’s alleged failure to investigate in connection with a foster care placement “should be judged under the deliberate indifference standard,” id. at 811.

Neither Nicini nor Miller was a state-created danger case (Nicini proceeded on a “special relationship” theory, while the plaintiff in Miller alleged that a social worker pursued a child abuse investigation without probable cause). But both Nicini and Miller involved substantive due process claims and the Court of Appeals applied the Lewis framework in both cases. For further discussion of the “special relationship” theory, see infra Instruction 4.16.

4.14 Section 1983 – State-created Danger

1 In other words, “except in those cases involving either true split-second decisions or, on 2 the other end of the spectrum, those in which officials have the luxury of relaxed deliberation, an 3 official’s conduct may create state-created danger liability if it exhibits a level of gross negligence
4 or arbitrariness that shocks the conscience.” Marasco, 318 F.3d at 509.²⁷³ In Ziccardi v. City of 5 Philadelphia, 288 F.3d 57, 66 (3d Cir. 2002), the Court of Appeals provided some detail on the 6 nature of this standard.²⁷⁴ Specifically, the Court of Appeals held that the plaintiff must prove 7 “that the defendant[paramedics] consciously disregarded, not just a substantial risk, but a great
8 risk that serious harm would result if, knowing Smith was seriously injured, they moved Smith
9 without support for his back and neck.” Ziccardi, 288 F.3d at 66; see also Sanford, 456 F.3d at 10 310 (holding that “the relevant question is whether the officer consciously disregarded a great risk 11 of harm”).²⁷⁵

²⁷³ For example, the Court of Appeals has held that emergency medical technicians “who responded to an emergency in an apartment where a middle-aged man was experiencing a seizure” would be held to have violated substantive due process only if they “consciously disregard[ed] a substantial risk that [the man] would be seriously harmed by their actions.” Rivas v. City of Passaic, 365 F.3d 181, 184, 196 (3d Cir. 2004); see id. at 196 (stating that this test would be met if the EMTs had falsely told police officers that the man was violent and had failed to tell the police officers that the man was suffering a seizure); cf. Brown v. Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, 318 F.3d 473, 481 (3d Cir. 2003) (holding that “EMTs who attempted to arrive at the scene of the incident as rapidly as they could” did not behave in a way that shocks the conscience).

²⁷⁴ See id. at 66 n.6 (observing that the phrase ‘gross negligence or arbitrariness that shocks the conscience’ “is not well suited for th[e] purpose” of conveying the nature of the standard). Though Ziccardi is technically not a “state-created danger” case because the plaintiff alleged that the Ziccardi defendants injured the plaintiff themselves, rather than creating the danger of injury, Ziccardi applied the teachings of Lewis and is thus instructive here. See Ziccardi, 288 F.3d at 64; see also Estate of Smith v. Marasco, 430 F.3d 140, 154 n.10 (3d Cir. 2005) (“We think that the definition adopted in Ziccardi is useful in assessing [state-created danger] claims.”).

²⁷⁵ Despite stating the standard as one involving conscious disregard, the Sanford court also noted in the next sentence – and apparently with respect to the same point on the shocks-the-conscience spectrum – that “it is possible that actual knowledge of the risk may not be necessary where the risk is ‘obvious.’” Sanford, 456 F.3d at 310. Earlier in its opinion (as mentioned in the footnote following this one), the Sanford court discussed a similar point in connection with the deliberate indifference standard, see id. at 309 & n.13.

4.14 Section 1983 – State-created Danger

1 In Kaucher v. County of Bucks, 455 F.3d 418 (3d Cir. 2006), the Court of Appeals noted
2 uncertainty whether the deliberate-indifference test that applies under the Lewis substantive due
3 process framework is an objective or a subjective test, see id. at 428 n.5.²⁷⁶ The Court observed
4 that the Eighth Amendment deliberate-indifference test is subjective, see id. at 427, but that the 5 deliberate-indifference test for municipal liability is objective, see id. at 428 n.5. The Kaucher
6 Court “recognize[d] strong arguments weighing in favor of both standards,” but declined to decide
7 the question because the plaintiff’s claim failed under either standard. *Id.*²⁷⁷
8

9 In Walter v. Pike County, 544 F.3d 182 (3d Cir. 2008), the Court of Appeals considered
10 claims arising from the July 2002 murder of a man who was pressing charges against the murderer
11 for sexually assaulting the victim’s daughters. The plaintiffs’ claims focused on two sets of law
12 enforcement actions: first, law enforcement officials’ August 2001 actions in involving the father
13 in the perpetrator’s arrest on the sexual assault charges, and second, the officials’ failure to warn 14 the father of the perpetrator’s subsequent menacing behavior (in the summer and perhaps the 15 spring of 2002) toward the police chief who arrested him. In holding that the plaintiffs’ state-
16 created danger claims failed, the Court of Appeals disaggregated the defendants’ actions at the 17 time of the arrest from the defendants’ state of mind when they later failed to warn the victim about 18 the perpetrator’s menacing behavior. The Court of Appeals held that (1) at the time of the arrest 19 in 2001 the defendants lacked the requisite culpable state of mind, and (2) at the time of the ²⁷⁶ See also Sanford, 456 F.3d at 309 & n.13 (noting “the possibility that deliberate indifference might exist without actual knowledge of a risk of harm when the risk is so obvious that it should be known,” but “leav[ing] to another day the question whether actual knowledge is required to meet the culpability requirement in state-created danger cases”).

²⁷⁷ The plaintiffs in Kaucher were a corrections officer and his spouse, both of whom contracted drug-resistant Staphylococcus aureus infections. The Court of Appeals upheld the dismissal of the plaintiffs’ substantive due process claims, on the ground that the evidence would not permit a reasonable jury to find deliberate indifference on the part of the defendants. See id. at 431. The Kaucher court, relying on Collins v. City of Harker Heights, Tex., 503 U.S. 115 (1992), for the proposition “that the Constitution does not guarantee public employees a safe working environment,” Kaucher, 455 F.3d at 424, distinguished claims by corrections employees from prisoner claims. Noting a recent verdict in favor of inmates who had contracted staph infections, the Court of Appeals observed that the inmates had presented evidence of conditions that “did not affect corrections officers, who were free to seek outside medical treatment, who did not live in the jail, and who received detailed instructions on infectious disease prevention in the jail’s standard operating procedures.” Id. at 429 n.6. More generally, the Court of Appeals noted “well recognized differences between the duties owed to prisoners and the duties owed to employees and others whose liberty is not restricted.” Id. at 430.

4.14 Section 1983 – State-created Danger

1 subsequent failure to warn in 2002 the defendants may have had a culpable state of mind but they 2 took no affirmative act that would ground a state-created danger claim. See id. at 192-96. Under 3 Walter, it appears that some state-created danger claims may fail because the culpable state of 4 mind occurs too long after the affirmative act.

6 The third element. The third element requires “a relationship between the state and the 7 person injured . . . during which the state places the victim in danger of a foreseeable injury.”
8 Kneipp v. Tedder, 95 F.3d 1199, 1209 (3d Cir. 1996) (holding that jury could find third element 9 met where defendant, “exercising his powers as a police officer, placed [the plaintiff] in danger of 10 foreseeable injury when he sent her home unescorted in a visibly intoxicated state in cold
11 weather”).²⁷⁸ This element excludes cases “where the state actor creates only a threat to the general
12 population.” Morse, 132 F.3d at 913 (citing Martinez v. California, 444 U.S. 277, 285 (1980)); 13 see also Mark v. Borough of Hatboro, 51 F.3d 1137, 1153 (3d Cir. 1995) (“When the alleged 14 unlawful act is a policy directed at the public at large – namely a failure to protect the public by 15 failing adequately to screen applicants for membership in a volunteer fire company” – the requisite 16 relationship is absent). However, the Court of Appeals has suggested that the plaintiff need not 17 always show that injury to the specific plaintiff was foreseeable – i.e., that “in certain situations,
18 [a plaintiff may] bring a state-created danger claim if the plaintiff was a member of a discrete class
19 of persons subjected to the potential harm brought about by the state's actions.” Morse, 132 F.3d
20 at 913 (dictum).²⁷⁹ “The primary focus when making this determination is foreseeability.” Id. See 21 also L.R. v. School District of Philadelphia, 836 F.3d 235, 247 & n.57 (3d Cir. 2016) (concluding 22 that the kindergarten student was a foreseeable victim of the teacher’s conduct in releasing her to 23 a stranger and noting that no “special relationship” is required on a state-created danger theory).

24
25 The fourth element. “The final element . . . is whether the state actor used its authority to 26 create an opportunity which otherwise would not have existed for the specific harm to occur.”

²⁷⁸ See also Rivas, 365 F.3d at 197 (“If the jury credits ... testimony that [the police] were told by the EMTs that Mr. Rivas physically assaulted Rodriguez but were not given any information about his medical condition, it is foreseeable that Mr. Rivas would be among the ‘discrete class’ of persons placed in harm's way as a result of [the EMTs’] actions.”).

²⁷⁹ See also Marasco, 318 F.3d at 507 (“In Morse we held that the third requirement – a relationship between the state and the plaintiff – ultimately depends on whether the plaintiff was a foreseeable victim, either individually or as part of a discrete class of foreseeable victims.”); Bright, 443 F.3d at 281 (third element requires “a relationship between the state and the plaintiff ... such that ‘the plaintiff was a foreseeable victim of the defendant's acts,’ or a ‘member of a discrete class of persons subjected to the potential harm brought about by the state's actions,’ as opposed to a member of the public in general”).

4.14 Section 1983 – State-created Danger

1 Morse, 132 F.3d at 914, or, in other words, “whether, but for the defendants' actions, the plaintiff
2 would have been in a less harmful position,” Marasco, 318 F.3d at 510.²⁸⁰ In Morse, the Court of 3 Appeals reasoned that “the dispositive factor appears to be whether the state has in some way
4 placed the plaintiff in a dangerous position that was foreseeable, and not whether the act was more
5 appropriately characterized as an affirmative act or an omission.” Morse, 132 F.3d at 915.²⁸¹ More 6 recently, however, the Court of Appeals has required a “showing that state authority was 7 affirmatively exercised,” on the theory that “[i]t is misuse of state authority, rather than a failure
8 to use it, that can violate the Due Process Clause.” Bright, 443 F.3d at 282.²⁸² The panel majority 9 in Bright stressed that the fourth element requires an affirmative act on the defendant’s part. See
10 *id.*²⁸³ Moreover, in Kaucher, the Court of Appeals noted that “a specific and deliberate exercise
11 of state authority, while necessary to satisfy the fourth element of the test, is not sufficient. There 12 must be a direct causal relationship between the affirmative act of the state and plaintiff’s harm.
13 Only then will the affirmative act render the plaintiff ‘more vulnerable to danger than had the state 14 not acted at all.’” Kaucher, 455 F.3d at 432 (quoting Bright, 443 F.3d at 281).²⁸⁴ In Morrow v.

²⁸⁰ See also Rivas, 365 F.3d at 197 (“A reasonable factfinder could conclude that the EMTs' decision to call for police backup and then (1) inform the officers on their arrival that Mr. Rivas had assaulted [an EMT], (2) not advise the officers about Mr. Rivas's medical condition, and (3) abandon control over the situation, when taken together, created an opportunity for harm that would not have otherwise existed.”).

²⁸¹ Compare Kneipp, 95 F.3d at 1210 (concluding that a reasonable jury could find the fourth element satisfied where “[t]he affirmative acts of the police officers ... created a dangerous situation”).

²⁸² See also Burella v. City of Philadelphia, 501 F.3d 134, 146 (3d Cir. 2007) (“Jill Burella cannot succeed on her state-created danger claim because she fails to allege any facts that would show that the officers affirmatively exercised their authority in a way that rendered her more vulnerable to her husband's abuse.... As in Bright, Jill Burella does not allege any facts that would establish that the officers did anything other than fail to act.”); Jiminez v. All American Rathskeller, Inc., 503 F.3d 247, 255-56 (3d Cir. 2007) (following Bright); Phillips v. County of Allegheny, 515 F.3d 224, 236 (3d Cir. 2008) (same).

²⁸³ The dissent in Bright, by contrast, argued that the fourth element can be satisfied by combining an action with subsequent omissions. See Bright, 443 F.3d at 290 (Nygaard, J., dissenting) (“The conduct alleged here, when taken together, contains both an initial act – the confrontation between the parole officer and Koschalk – and then an omission – the parole officer's abdication of his responsibility to take action on a clear parole violation.”).

²⁸⁴ See Phillips, 515 F.3d at 236 (following Kaucher). The requirement of a causal

4.14 Section 1983 – State-created Danger

1 Balaski, 719 F.3d 160, 178 (3d Cir. 2013) (en banc), the Court of Appeals stated while suspending
2 a bully “was an affirmative act by school officials, we fail to see how the suspension created a new 3 danger” for the plaintiff children or rendered them more vulnerable. The Court of Appeals refused
4 to treat the failure to expel the bully, or allowing him to return to school after the suspension, as 5 an affirmative act. It similarly refused to treat the school’s failure to prevent the bully from 6 boarding the plaintiffs’ bus as an affirmative act. Id. at 178-79 (“merely restating the Defendants’
7 inaction as an affirmative failure to act does not alter the passive nature of the alleged conduct”).
8 In L.R. v. School District of Philadelphia, 836 F.3d 235, 242-43 (3d Cir. 2016), the court of appeals 9 noted the “inherent difficulty in drawing a line between an affirmative act and a failure to act” and 10 found it useful to evaluate the status quo “before the alleged act or omission occurred, and then to 11 ask whether the state actor’s exercise of authority resulted in a departure from that status quo.”
12 Viewed from that perspective, the teacher’s “actions resulted in a drastic change to the status quo, 13 not a maintenance of a situation that was already dangerous.”
14

15 The Court of Appeals has summarized the fourth element’s requirements thus: “The three 16 necessary conditions to satisfy the fourth element of a state-created danger claim are that: (1) a 17 state actor exercised his or her authority,²⁸⁵ (2) the state actor took an affirmative action, and (3) relationship between the affirmative act and the plaintiff’s harm appears to have been the dispositive problem for a state-created danger claim dismissed in Bennett v. City of Philadelphia, 499 F.3d 281 (3d Cir. 2007). In Bennett, the Bennett family was placed under the Philadelphia Department of Human Services’ supervision because the mother posed a serious risk of harm to her children. Some three years later, DHS successfully petitioned the family court to discharge its supervision of the family based on its contention that it could not locate the family. Some three years after that, DHS received a hotline report that the man with whom the Bennett children then lived beat them; but whatever actions were taken by the DHS worker assigned to investigate that report failed to prevent one of the Bennett children from being beaten to death three days after the hotline report. The surviving children based their state-created danger claim against DHS on the argument “that the closing of their dependency case rendered them more vulnerable to harm by their mother and acquaintances because closing the case effectively prevented a private source of aid, the Child Advocate, from looking for the children.” Bennett, 499 F.3d at 289. The court upheld the grant of summary judgment to the defendants, reasoning that “DHS’ case closure did not prevent the Child Advocacy Unit from searching for the children,” and thus that “Appellants failed to demonstrate a material issue of fact that the City used its authority to create an opportunity for the Bennett sisters to be abused that would not have existed absent DHS intervention.” Id.

²⁸⁵ Having set forth the first sub-element (requiring exercise of government authority), the Ye Court acknowledged that this sub-element merely duplicates the “state action” requirement for all Section 1983 claims (see supra Instructions 4.4 through 4.4.3): The court

4.14 Section 1983 – State-created Danger

1 this act created a danger to the citizen or rendered the citizen more vulnerable to danger than if the 2 state had not acted at all.” Ye v. United States, 484 F.3d 634, 639 (3d Cir. 2007). In Ye, the plaintiff
3 presented evidence that despite the plaintiff’s cardiac symptoms the defendant, a government-
4 employed physician, told him there was nothing to worry about; that due to this assurance, he and 5 his family failed to seek timely emergency medical care; and that due to that failure, he suffered
6 permanent physical harm. See id. at 635-36. The Court of Appeals indicated that this evidence
7 would justify a reasonable jury in finding that the fourth element’s first and third sub-elements
8 were met – i.e., that the physician was exercising state authority, see id. at 639-40, and that but for 9 the physician’s assurance that he was fine, the plaintiff would have sought emergency treatment,
10 see id. at 642-43. But the Court of Appeals held that no reasonable jury could find for the plaintiff 11 on the second sub-element – the “affirmative action” requirement – because “a mere assurance 12 cannot form the basis of a state-created danger claim.” Id. at 640. The Ye Court, noting that the 13 state-created danger doctrine is an outgrowth of the Supreme Court’s discussion in DeShaney v.
14 Winnebago County Department of Social Services, 489 U.S. 189 (1989), relied on language in 15 DeShaney stating that “[i]n the substantive due process analysis, it is the State’s affirmative act of 16 restraining the individual’s freedom to act on his own behalf – through incarceration, 17 institutionalization, or other similar restraint of personal liberty – which is the ‘deprivation of 18 liberty’ triggering the protections of the Due Process Clause.” Ye, 484 F.3d at 640-41 (quoting 19 DeShaney, 489 U.S. at 200). The Court of Appeals reasoned that just as an assurance that someone 20 will be arrested does not meet the affirmative-act requirement, see Bright, 443 F.3d at 284, neither 21 does a doctor’s assurance that the patient is fine, see Ye, 484 F.3d at 641-42.

22
23 The Ye court recognized that the DeShaney opinion focused much of its attention on the 24 “special relationship” theory of liability (as distinct from a state-created danger theory), see Ye,
25 484 F.3d at 641, which raises some question as to whether the “deprivation of liberty” concept
26 should provide the template for judging all state-created danger claims. Perhaps for this reason, 27 the Ye Court noted that “[t]he act that invades a plaintiff’s personal liberty may not always be a 28 restraint, as in the special-relationship context.” Ye, 484 F.3d at 641 n.4. See, e.g., Phillips, 515
29 F.3d at 229, 243 (holding that complaint properly alleged state-created danger claim where it 30 alleged that 911 dispatchers gave their co-worker confidential information that enabled him to 31 locate and kill his ex-girlfriend’s current boyfriend).

32
33 See the discussion of the second element, above, for a summary of Walter v. Pike County, 34 544 F.3d 182 (3d Cir. 2008), in which the plaintiffs’ claims failed because the defendants’ 35 affirmative acts occurred at a time when the defendants did not (yet) have the requisite culpable rejected the defendant’s contention “that there exists an independent requirement that the ‘authority’ exercised must be peculiarly within the province of the state,” and explained that “[t]he ‘authority’ language is simply a reflection of the ‘state actor’ requirement for all § 1983 claims.” Id. at 640.

3 Model

5 [Plaintiff] claims that [defendant] violated [plaintiff’s] Fourteenth Amendment rights by 6 [describe the high-speed chase].

8 To establish this claim, [plaintiff] must prove both of the following things by a 9 preponderance of the evidence:

10
11 First: [Defendant] [describe [plaintiff’s] allegations concerning the high-speed chase].

12
13 Second: [Defendant] acted for the purpose of causing harm unrelated to the goal of 14 [apprehending [plaintiff]] [doing [his/her] job as a law enforcement officer]. It is not 15 enough for [plaintiff] to show that [defendant] was careless or even reckless in pursuing 16 [plaintiff]. [Plaintiff] must prove that [defendant] acted for the purpose of causing harm 17 unrelated to the valid goal of pursuing [plaintiff].

18

20 Comment

21
22 “[H]igh speed chases with no intent to harm suspects physically or to worsen their legal 23 plight do not give rise to liability under the Fourteenth Amendment, redressible by an action under 24 § 1983.” County of Sacramento v. Lewis, 523 U.S. 833, 854 (1998).²⁸⁶ “[I]n a high speed

²⁸⁶ Such claims will be governed by substantive due process rather than Fourth Amendment standards, because there is no “seizure” for Fourth Amendment purposes either during a high-speed chase or even when the police accidentally crash into a suspect. See Lewis, 523 U.S. at 843-44; compare infra note 287 (discussing possibility that seizure might result from use of force during high-speed chase). By contrast, when police “s[ee]k to stop [a suspect] by means of a roadblock and succeed[] in doing so[,] [t]hat is enough to constitute a ‘seizure’ within the meaning of the Fourth Amendment,” and the seizure will be evaluated under the Fourth Amendment reasonableness standard. Brower v. County of Inyo, 489 U.S. 593, 599 (1989); see also Scott v. Harris, 127 S. Ct. 1769, 1776 (2007) (noting that law enforcement officer defendant did not dispute “that his decision to terminate the car chase by ramming his bumper into respondent’s vehicle constituted a [Fourth Amendment] ‘seizure’”).

Prior to the Supreme Court’s decision in Lewis, the Court of Appeals had already applied the “shocks the conscience” standard to police pursuit claims. See Fagan v. City of Vineland, 22

4.15 Section 1983 – High-Speed Chase

1 automobile chase aimed at apprehending a suspected offender only a purpose to cause harm
2 unrelated to the legitimate object of arrest will satisfy the element of arbitrary conduct shocking to 3 the conscience, necessary for a due process violation.” Id. at 836. The Lewis Court rejected a less 4 demanding standard (such as deliberate indifference) because it reasoned that the decision whether 5 to pursue a high-speed chase had to be made swiftly and required police to weigh competing 6 concerns: “on one hand the need to stop a suspect and show that flight from the law is no way to 7 freedom, and, on the other, the high speed threat to all those within stopping range, be they 8 suspects, their passengers, other drivers, or bystanders.” Id. at 853. Based on the conclusion that 9 “the officer's instinct was to do his job as a law enforcement officer, not to induce [the motorcycle
10 driver’s] lawlessness, or to terrorize, cause harm, or kill,” the Court found no substantive due 11 process violation in Lewis. Id. at 855.

12
13 Courts should not “second guess a police officer's decision to initiate pursuit of a suspect 14 so long as the officers were acting ‘in the service of a legitimate governmental objective,’” such 15 as “to apprehend one fleeing the police officers' legitimate investigation of suspicious behavior.”
16 Davis v. Township of Hillside, 190 F.3d 167, 170 (3d Cir. 1999) (quoting Lewis, 523 U.S. at 846).
17 In Davis, the plaintiff asserted that a police car chasing a suspect bumped the suspect’s car, causing 18 the suspect to hit his head and pass out, which caused the suspect’s car to collide with other cars, 19 one of which hit and injured the plaintiff (a bystander). See id. at 169. Finding no “evidence from 20 which a jury could infer a purpose to cause harm unrelated to the legitimate object of the chase,”
21 the Court of Appeals affirmed the grant of summary judgment to the defendants. Id. Judge McKee 22 concurred but wrote separately to note that “if the record supported a finding that police
23 gratuitously rammed [the suspect’s] car, and if plaintiff properly alleged that they did so to injure 24 or terrorize [the suspect], liability could still attach under Lewis.” Id. at 172-73 (McKee, J., 25 concurring); see also id. at 173 (“I do not read the majority opinion as holding that police can use 26 any amount of force during a high speed chase no matter how tenuously the force is related to the 27 legitimate law enforcement objective of arresting the fleeing suspect.”).²⁸⁷

F.3d 1296, 1308-09 (3d Cir. 1994) (en banc). Because Lewis provides a more specific articulation of the “shocks the conscience” standard as applied to police pursuit cases, the model instruction follows Lewis.

²⁸⁷ In at least some instances, the use of force by police during a high-speed chase could effect a seizure so as to trigger the application of Fourth Amendment standards. In explaining that a seizure occurs “only when there is a governmental termination of freedom of movement through means intentionally applied,” Brower, 489 U.S. at 597, the Court gave the following example:

[I]n the hypothetical situation that concerned the Court of Appeals[,] [t]he pursuing police car sought to stop the suspect only by the show of authority

4.15 Section 1983 – High-Speed Chase

represented by flashing lights and continuing pursuit; and though he was in fact stopped, he was stopped by a different means – his loss of control of his vehicle and the subsequent crash. If, instead of that, the police cruiser had pulled alongside the fleeing car and sideswiped it, producing the crash, then the termination of the suspect's freedom of movement would have been a seizure.

Id.; see also Scott v. Harris, 127 S. Ct. 1769, 1777-79 (2007) (using Fourth Amendment excessive force analysis to assess claim arising from county deputy's decision to ram fleeing suspect's car with his bumper in order to end the chase).

1 4.16 Section 1983 – Duty to Protect Child in Foster Care

5 When the state places a child in foster care, the state has entered into a special relationship
6 with that child and this relationship gives rise to a duty under the Fourteenth Amendment to the 7 United States Constitution. [Plaintiff] claims that [defendant] violated [his/her] duty by placing 8 [[plaintiff] [child]]²⁸⁸ in foster care with John and Jane Doe. [The parties agree that] [Plaintiff 9 claims that] [describe abuse of plaintiff while in foster care].

10
11 To establish this claim, [plaintiff] must prove both of the following things by a 12 preponderance of the evidence:

13
14 First: [Defendant] acted with deliberate indifference when [he/she] placed [plaintiff] in the 15 Does' foster home.

16
17 Second: [Plaintiff] was harmed by that placement.

18
19 I will now proceed to give you more details on the first of these two requirements.

20
21 [Deliberate indifference means that [defendant] knew of a substantial risk that [Mr. Doe]
22 [Ms. Doe] would abuse [plaintiff], and that [defendant] disregarded that risk. [Plaintiff] must show
23 that [defendant] actually knew of the risk. If [defendant] knew of facts that [he/she] strongly 24 suspected to be true, and those facts indicated a substantial risk that [Mr. Doe] [Ms. Doe] would 25 abuse [plaintiff], [defendant] cannot escape liability merely because [he/she] refused to take the 26 opportunity to confirm those facts. But keep in mind that mere carelessness or negligence is not 27 enough to make an official liable. It is not enough for [plaintiff] to show that a reasonable person
28 would have known, or that [defendant] should have known, of the risk to [plaintiff]. [Plaintiff]
29 must show that [defendant] actually knew of the risk. If [plaintiff] proves that there was an obvious 30 risk of abuse, you are entitled to infer from the obviousness of the risk that [defendant] knew of 31 the risk. [However, [defendant] claims that even if there was an obvious risk, [he/she] was unaware 32 of that risk. If you find that [defendant] was unaware of the risk,²⁸⁹ then you must find that [he/she]

²⁸⁸ If the plaintiff is someone other than the child, then the child's name (rather than the plaintiff's name) should be inserted in appropriate places in this instruction.

²⁸⁹ It is unclear who has the burden of proof with respect to a defendant's claim of lack of awareness of an obvious risk. See Comment 4.11.1.

2 3 Comment

5 “[W]hen the state places a child in state-regulated foster care, the state has entered into a 6 special relationship with that child which imposes upon it certain affirmative duties. The failure 7 to perform such duties can give rise, under sufficiently culpable circumstances, to liability under 8 section 1983.” Nicini v. Morra, 212 F.3d 798, 808 (3d Cir. 2000) (en banc). However, 9 “compulsory school attendance laws and the concomitant in loco parentis authority and discretion 10 that schools necessarily exercise over students” do not give rise to a “special relationship,” even 11 in a sympathetic case where a violent bully subject to two restraining orders assaults other students.
12 Morrow v. Balaski, 719 F.3d 160, 170-72 (3d Cir. 2013) (en banc) (but noting that “a school’s 13 exercise of authority to lock classrooms in the wake of tragedies . . . may be a relevant factor in 14 determining whether a special relationship or state-created danger exists in those specific cases”).
15 In L.R. v. School District of Philadelphia, 836 F.3d 235, 247 & n.57 (3d Cir. 2016), the court of 16 appeals noted the possibility left open in Morrow and stated, “We have never addressed the special 17 relationship theory in the context of a school’s youngest and most vulnerable students,” and 18 observed that “at some point, the age and/or dependency of certain students in combination with 19 restraints a school may place on its students may indeed forge a ‘special relationship.’” 20

21 The culpability requirement in such a “special relationship” case is governed by the 22 framework set forth in County of Sacramento v. Lewis, 523 U.S. 833 (1998). See Nicini, 212 F.3d
23 at 809.²⁹¹ Under that framework, the plaintiff must show that the defendant’s conduct “shocked

²⁹⁰ This paragraph provides a subjective definition of “deliberate indifference,” drawn from the Eighth Amendment standard discussed in Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825 (1994). As discussed in the Comment, Third Circuit precedent leaves open the possibility that a plaintiff could establish liability for failure to protect a child in foster care under an objective deliberate indifference standard. If the objective standard applies, then this paragraph must be redrafted accordingly.

²⁹¹ Some district court decisions within the Third Circuit have recognized an alternative theory of liability: Under the “‘professional judgment’ standard . . . , defendants could be held liable if their actions were ‘such a substantial departure from accepted professional judgment, practice, or standards as to demonstrate that the person responsible actually did not base the decision on such a judgment.’” Jordan v. City of Philadelphia, 66 F. Supp. 2d 638, 646 (E.D. Pa. 1999) (quoting Wendy H. v. City of Philadelphia, 849 F. Supp. 367, 372 (E.D. Pa. 1994) (quoting Youngberg v. Romeo, 457 U.S. 307, 323 (1982))). The Court of Appeals in Nicini declined to “decide whether, consistent with Lewis, [the professional judgment] standard could be applied to” substantive due process claims for failure to protect a child in foster care. Nicini,

1 the conscience”; the precise level of culpability required will vary depending on the circumstances,
2 and especially on the availability (or not) of the opportunity for the defendant to deliberate before
3 acting. See id. at 810. In Nicini, the Court of Appeals applied a “deliberate indifference” standard.
4 See id. at 811 (“In the context of this case . . . Cyrus's actions in investigating the Morra home
5 should be judged under the deliberate indifference standard.”).²⁹² The Nicini court did not,
6 however, decide whether this “deliberate indifference” standard should follow the subjective
7 “deliberate indifference” standard applied to prisoners’ Eighth Amendment claims, see Nicini, 212
8 F.3d at 811 (citing Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825 (1994)),²⁹³ or whether a defendant’s “failure
9 to act in light of a risk of which the official should have known, as opposed to failure to act in light 10 of an actually known risk, constitutes deliberately indifferent conduct in this setting,” because 11 under either standard the court held the plaintiff’s claim should fail, see Nicini, 212 F.3d at 812
12 (holding that defendant’s conduct “amounted, at most, to negligence”).

212 F.3d at 811 n. 9.

²⁹² Compare Miller v. City of Philadelphia, 174 F.3d 368, 375-76 (3d Cir. 1999) (“[A] social worker acting to separate parent and child . . . rarely will have the luxury of proceeding in a deliberate fashion As a result, . . . the standard of culpability for substantive due process purposes must exceed both negligence and deliberate indifference, and reach a level of gross negligence or arbitrariness that indeed ‘shocks the conscience.’”); B.S. v. Somerset County, 704 F.3d 250, 267-68 (3d Cir. 2013) (applying Miller and holding that child welfare worker’s actions in obtaining court order and removing daughter from mother’s custody did not “shock the conscience”); Mulholland v. Government County of Berks, 706 F.3d 227, 234, 241-44 (3d Cir. 2013) (applying Miller and finding no conscience-shocking behavior by county agency in removal of plaintiffs’ children and grandchild or in assertion during administrative appeal that Mulholland’s status “should be changed from ‘indicated’ perpetrator [of child abuse] to ‘founded’ perpetrator”).

²⁹³ For a discussion of this standard, see the Comment to Instruction 4.11, supra.

A number of circuits have adopted a subjective standard. See, e.g., Hernandez ex rel. Hernandez v. Texas Dept. of Protective and Regulatory Services, 380 F.3d 872, 882 (5th Cir. 2004) (“[T]he central inquiry for a determination of deliberate indifference must be whether the state social workers were aware of facts from which the inference could be drawn, that placing children in the Clauds foster home created a substantial risk of danger.”); Lewis v. Anderson, 308 F.3d 768, 775-76 (7th Cir. 2002) (“If state actors are to be held liable for the abuse perpetrated by a screened foster parent, under K.H. the plaintiffs must present evidence that the state officials knew or suspected that abuse was occurring or likely.”); Ray v. Foltz, 370 F.3d 1079, 1083-84 (11th Cir. 2004) (issue is whether “defendants had actual knowledge or deliberately failed to learn of the serious risk to R.M. of the sort of injuries he ultimately sustained”).
