8.0 ADEA Introductory Instruction

Model

In this case the Plaintiff _____ has made a claim under the Federal Civil Rights statute that prohibits age discrimination against [an employee] [an applicant for employment], if that person is 40 years of age or older. This statute is known as the Age Discrimination in Employment Act or “ADEA.”

Specifically, [plaintiff] claims that [he/she] was [denied employment] [describe the employment action at issue] by the defendant _____ because of [plaintiff’s] age.

[Defendant] denies that [plaintiff] was discriminated against because of [his/her] age. Further, [defendant] asserts that [describe any affirmative defenses].

I will now instruct you more fully on the issues you must address in this case.

Comment

Referring to the parties by their names, rather than solely as “Plaintiff” and “Defendant,” can improve jurors’ comprehension. In these instructions, bracketed references to “[plaintiff]” or “[defendant]” indicate places where the name of the party should be inserted.

Neither Title VII nor Section 1981 prohibits employers from discriminating on grounds of age. In the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967, however, Congress provided protection for employees age 40 or older who are the victims of discrimination because of age.¹ The central provision of the ADEA is 29 U.S.C. § 623, which provides in part as follows:

§ 623. Prohibition of age discrimination

(a) Employer practices. It shall be unlawful for an employer--

(1) to fail or refuse to hire or to discharge any individual or otherwise discriminate against any individual with respect to his compensation, terms, conditions, or privileges of employment, because of such individual’s age;

(2) to limit, segregate, or classify his employees in any way which would deprive or tend to deprive any individual of employment opportunities or otherwise adversely affect his status as an employee, because of such individual’s age; or

¹ In Hildebrand v. Allegheny County, 757 F.3d 99 (3d Cir. 2014), the Court of Appeals held that the ADEA displaces Section 1983 Equal Protection claims for age discrimination. See id. at 110 (“Congress intended the ADEA to be the exclusive remedy for claims of age discrimination in employment.”).

8.0 ADEA Introductory Instruction

(3) to reduce the wage rate of any employee in order to comply with this Act.

In Hill v. Borough of Kutztown, 455 F.3d 225, 247 (3d Cir. 2006), the Third Circuit set forth the basic elements of an ADEA claim as follows:

To state a claim for age discrimination under the ADEA, a plaintiff must allege that (1) he is over forty [sic], (2) he is qualified for the position in question, (3) he suffered from an adverse employment decision, and (4) his replacement was sufficiently younger to permit a reasonable inference of age discrimination.

The Hill court found that these standards were met where the 42-year-old plaintiff alleged that he was constructively discharged from his job, for which he was qualified, and replaced by a person who was 27. The court noted that “[c]onstructive discharge is an adverse employment decision that may form the basis of an ADEA claim.” Id. at 247 n.32.

Relationship Between the Coverage of the ADEA and Title VII

The ADEA is patterned after Title VII (though the ADEA incorporates a number of the enforcement and remedial provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act).² In some instances the legal standards for determining discrimination under the ADEA are the same as those applicable to Title VII. For example, in Thurston v. TWA, 469 U.S. 111, 121 (1985), the Court applied Title VII precedent to conclude in an ADEA case that an employer may not apportion a benefit in a discriminatory way even if it could have withheld the benefit in question altogether; the Thurston Court stated that this principle “applies with equal force in the context of age discrimination, for the substantive provisions of the ADEA ‘were derived in haec verba from Title VII.’” Lorillard v. Pons, supra, [434 U.S. 575] at 584 [1978].” The Thurston Court also noted that “[s]everal Courts of Appeals have recognized the similarity between the two statutes. In Hodgson v. First Federal Savings & Loan Assn., 455 F.2d 818, 820 (1972), for example, the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit stated that with ‘a few minor exceptions the prohibitions of [the ADEA] are in terms identical to those of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.’”

The Supreme Court rejected the use of the Title VII mixed-motive framework for ADEA cases in Gross v. FBL Financial Services, Inc., 557 U.S. 167, 176 (2009) (“To establish a disparate-treatment claim under the plain language of the ADEA, therefore, a plaintiff must prove that age was the “but-for” cause of the employer’s adverse decision.”). Thus, unlike Chapter 5 – which provides separate instructions for “pretext” cases and “mixed-motive” cases – Chapter 8 provides only one instruction for disparate treatment, because in all ADEA cases the plaintiff always retains ² See, e.g., C.I.R. v. Schleier, 515 U.S. 323, 325-26 (1995) (observing that “[t]he ADEA incorporates many of the enforcement and remedial mechanisms of the” FLSA, but also noting distinctions between the two statutory schemes), superseded by statute on other grounds as noted in Eshelman v. Agere Sys., Inc., 554 F.3d 426, 441 (3d Cir. 2009); Halle v. W. Penn Allegheny Health Sys. Inc., 842 F.3d 215, 224 n.8 (3d Cir. 2016) (observing that “the ADEA incorporates enforcement provisions of the FLSA, including the collective action provisions of 29 U.S.C. § 216(b)”).

8.0 ADEA Introductory Instruction

the burden to prove that age discrimination was the but-for cause of the adverse employment action. See Comment 8.1.1.

There are a number of other important differences in the legal standards of ADEA and Title VII. One example is that punitive damages are not available under the ADEA, as the statute provides a substitute of “liquidated” (double) damages for “willful” violations. This difference and all others will be noted in the commentary to the individual ADEA instructions.

Admissibility of Evidence of Other Acts of Age Discrimination

In Sprint/United Mgmt. Co. v. Mendelsohn, 128 S. Ct. 1140 (2007), the Court provided guidance on how a trial court should treat evidence of “other acts” of age discrimination. The plaintiff argued that her employer had a company-wide policy discriminating against age, and proffered a number of instances in which other age-protected employees had suffered adverse job determinations. The trial court excluded this evidence on the ground that none of the instances involved the plaintiff’s immediate supervisors. The court of appeals took this as a ruling that “me-too” evidence was never relevant, i.e., as a per se rule of exclusion.

The Supreme Court agreed with the court of appeals that a per se rule of admissibility or inadmissibility of other acts of discrimination is not permissible, given that Fed. R. Evid. 403 requires the trial court to balance the probative value of evidence against the dangers of prejudice, confusion and delay. But the Court found it “not entirely clear” that the trial court in this case had in fact excluded the evidence under a per se rule. It remanded the case to allow the trial court “to conduct the relevant inquiry under the appropriate standard.” The Court noted that “[t]he question whether evidence of discrimination by other supervisors is relevant in an individual ADEA case is fact-based and depends on many factors, including how closely related the evidence is to the plaintiff’s circumstances and theory of the case” and that “[a]pplying Rule 403 to determine if evidence is prejudicial also requires a fact-intensive, context-specific inquiry.”

Ministerial Exception

With respect to claims for wrongful termination, the First Amendment’s religion clauses give rise to an affirmative defense that “bar[s] the government from interfering with the decision of a religious group to fire one of its ministers.” Hosanna-Tabor Evangelical Lutheran Church & Sch. v. EEOC, 132 S. Ct. 694, 702, 709 n.4 (2012). Though Hosanna-Tabor involved a retaliation claim under the Americans with Disabilities Act, the Court’s broad description of the issue suggests that its recognition of a “ministerial exception” may apply equally to wrongful-termination claims brought under other federal anti-discrimination statutes. See id. at 710 (“The case before us is an employment discrimination suit brought on behalf of a minister, challenging her church’s decision to fire her.... [T]he ministerial exception bars such a suit.”). Our Lady of Guadalupe School v. Morrissey-Berru, 140 S. Ct. 2049 (2020), applied this defense to an ADEA discrimination claim. For further discussion of the ministerial exception, see Comment 5.0.

Scope of Chapter

8.0 ADEA Introductory Instruction

1 These model instructions address the elements of ADEA claims and defenses; pertinent
2 definitions; and questions of damages. The commentary is designed to explain the drafting of the 3 model instructions and generally does not focus on other procedural matters.³

³ Administrative-exhaustion requirements provide one example. 29 U.S.C. § 626(d)(1) sets an administrative-exhaustion requirement for ADEA claims generally. 29 U.S.C. § 633a sets a different administrative-exhaustion framework for ADEA claims by federal employees. The Committee has not attempted to determine whether assessing compliance with these exhaustion requirements ever presents a task for the jury. Compare Williams v. Runyon, 130 F.3d 568, 573 (3d Cir. 1997) (evincing the view that a question of compliance with the exhaustion requirement set by 29 C.F.R. § 1614.105 for Title VII suits by federal employees could properly be submitted to the jury), with Small v. Camden Cty., 728 F.3d 265, 269, 271 (3d Cir. 2013) (holding that compliance with the exhaustion requirement set by the Prison Litigation Reform Act presents a question that can be resolved by the judge). In the event that a dispute over exhaustion presents a jury question, the court may wish to submit relevant interrogatories to the jury. The Committee welcomes feedback from users of the model instructions concerning the need for, and appropriate nature of, model instructions on the topic of exhaustion.

8.1.1 Elements of an ADEA Claim— Disparate Treatment

Model

In this case [plaintiff] is alleging that [defendant] [describe alleged treatment] [plaintiff]. In order for [plaintiff] to recover on this discrimination claim against [defendant], [plaintiff] must prove that [defendant] intentionally discriminated against [plaintiff]. This means that [plaintiff] must prove that [his/her] age was a determinative factor in [defendant's] decision to [describe action] [plaintiff].

To prevail on this claim, [plaintiff] must prove the following by a preponderance of the evidence:

First: [Defendant] [failed to hire [plaintiff]] [failed to renew [plaintiff's] employment arrangement] [failed to promote [plaintiff]] [demoted [plaintiff]] [terminated [plaintiff]] [constructively discharged [plaintiff]] [or otherwise discriminated against [plaintiff] with respect to [plaintiff's] compensation, terms, conditions, or privileges of employment]⁴; and

Second: such action resulted in harm to plaintiff; and

Third: [Plaintiff's] age was a determinative factor in [defendant's] decision.

Although [plaintiff] must prove that [defendant] acted with the intent to discriminate, [plaintiff] is not required to prove that [defendant] acted with the particular intent to violate [plaintiff's] federal civil rights. Moreover, [plaintiff] is not required to produce direct evidence of intent, such as statements admitting discrimination. Intentional discrimination may be inferred from the existence of other facts.

You should weigh all the evidence received in the case in deciding whether [defendant] intentionally discriminated against [plaintiff]. [For example, you have been shown statistics in this case. Statistics are one form of evidence that you may consider when deciding whether a defendant intentionally discriminated against a plaintiff. You should evaluate statistical evidence along with all the other evidence.]

[Defendant] has given a nondiscriminatory reason for its [describe defendant's action]. If you believe [defendant's] stated reason and if you find that the [adverse employment action] would have occurred because of defendant's stated reason regardless of [plaintiff's] age, then you must find for [defendant]. If you disbelieve [defendant's] stated reason for its conduct, then you may, but need not, find that [plaintiff] has proved intentional discrimination. In determining whether [defendant's] stated reason for its actions was a pretext, or excuse, for discrimination, you may not question [defendant's] business judgment. You cannot find intentional discrimination simply because you disagree with the business judgment of [defendant] or believe it is harsh or unreasonable. You are not to consider [defendant's] wisdom. However, you may consider whether [plaintiff] has proven that [defendant's] reason is merely a cover-up for discrimination.

⁴ Please see the Comment for discussion of this list of alternatives.

8.1.1 Disparate Treatment

Concluding instruction:

Ultimately, you must decide whether [plaintiff] has proven that [his/her] age was a determinative factor in [defendant's employment decision.] "Determinative factor" means that if not for the plaintiff's age, the [adverse employment action] would not have occurred.

In deciding whether age was a determinative factor, you must be careful to distinguish age from other factors that are not dependent on age. [For example, if [defendant's] action was based on [plaintiff's] seniority, this is not an age-dependent decision. A person's seniority is based on time with the employer, and this is not the same factor as the person's age. Thus, an employer does not violate the ADEA just by interfering with an older employee's benefits that would have vested by virtue of the employee's years of service.]

Comment

"To establish a disparate-treatment claim under the plain language of the ADEA, ... a plaintiff must prove that age was the 'but-for' cause of the employer's adverse decision." Gross v. FBL Financial Services, Inc., 557 U.S. 167, 176 (2009). Under Gross, the "mixed motive" burden-shifting instruction that courts apply to some Title VII cases under Price Waterhouse v. Hopkins, 490 U.S. 228 (1989), is unavailable in ADEA cases. Thus, this chapter contains no analogue to Instruction 5.1.1.

Instruction 8.1.1 is modeled on Instruction 5.1.2's language concerning Title VII pretext cases. The Gross Court stated that it "has not definitively decided whether the evidentiary framework of McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. Green, 411 U.S. 792 ... (1973), utilized in Title VII cases is appropriate in the ADEA context," see Gross, 557 U.S. at 175 n.2; see also Reeves v. Sanderson Plumbing Products, Inc., 530 U.S. 133, 142 (2000) ("This Court has not squarely addressed whether the McDonnell Douglas framework, developed to assess claims brought under § 703(a)(1) of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 ... , also applies to ADEA actions. Because the parties do not dispute the issue, we shall assume, arguendo, that the McDonnell Douglas framework is fully applicable here."). The Third Circuit has applied the McDonnell Douglas framework in ADEA cases. See e.g., Burton v. Teleflex Inc., 707 F.3d 417, 425-26 (3d Cir. 2013) ("Because [plaintiff] has not provided direct evidence of discrimination, our inquiry under [the ADEA and Title VII] is governed by the three-part framework established in McDonnell Douglas");⁵ Willis v. UPMC Children's Hosp. of Pittsburgh, 808 F.3d 638, 644 (3d Cir. 2015)

⁵ The U.S. Supreme Court recently denied a petition for certiorari asking the Court to revisit and overrule McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. Green. Hittle v. City of Stockton, 145 S. Ct. 759, 759 (2025). The Court declined to review a Ninth Circuit panel opinion holding that Stockton's former Fire Chief could not proceed on his Title VII religious discrimination case against the City. Justice Thomas (joined by Justice Gorsuch) authored a dissent from the denial of certiorari

1 (“Age discrimination claims in which the plaintiff relies on circumstantial evidence proceed
2 according to the three-part burden-shifting framework set forth in McDonnell Douglas); cf. Smith
3 v. City of Allentown, 589 F.3d 684, 691 (3d Cir. 2009) (“[T]he but-for causation standard required
4 by Gross does not conflict with our continued application of the McDonnell Douglas paradigm in 5 age discrimination cases.”).

6 “The elements of a prima facie case of age discrimination are that: (1) the plaintiff is at 7 least forty years old;⁶ (2) the plaintiff suffered an adverse employment decision; (3) the plaintiff
8 was qualified for the position in question; and (4) the plaintiff was ultimately replaced by another
9 employee who was sufficiently younger so as to support an inference of a discriminatory motive.”⁷ 10 Willis v. UPMC Children’s Hosp. of Pittsburgh, 808 F.3d 638, 644 (3d Cir. 2015). But the test “is 11 not ‘intended to be rigid’”; “[w]here the plaintiff is not directly replaced, the fourth element is 12 satisfied if the plaintiff can provide facts which ‘if otherwise unexplained, are more likely than not 13 based on the consideration of impermissible factors.’” Id. (quoting Pivrotto v. Innovative Sys., that may suggest that Court may revisit the MDD framework in a future case “and decide whether its burden-shifting framework remains a workable and useful evidentiary tool.” Id. at 764 (Thomas, J., dissenting from denial of certiorari).

⁷ In O’Connor v. Consolidated Coin Caterers Corp., 517 U.S. 308 (1996), the Court rejected the argument that an ADEA plaintiff in a discharge case must show that he was replaced by someone under 40. Under O’Connor, the question is whether the employer relied on age in making the challenged decision, not on whether the employer chose someone outside the protected class. The Court added, however, that an inference of age discrimination “cannot be drawn from the replacement of one worker with another insignificantly younger.” 517 U.S. at 313. See also Maxfield v. Sinclair Int’l, 766 F.2d 788, 792-93 (3d Cir. 1985) (“The probative value of the age of the replacement will depend on the circumstances of the case. Although replacement by someone younger, without more, will not give rise to an inference of age discrimination, it has been noted that a substantial difference in the ages may be circumstantial evidence that gives rise to that inference. [citing cases] If the difference in ages of the two employees were insignificant, the district court would likely find that the evidence was insufficient to permit an inference of discrimination.”). On the question of what is a substantial difference in age, see, e.g., Sempier v. Johnson & Higgins, 45 F.3d 724 (3d Cir. 1995) (noting that no particular age difference must be shown; citing cases holding that a five year difference was sufficient, and other case law indicating that a one year difference was insufficient to support an inference of age discrimination).

8.1.1 Disparate Treatment

1 Inc., 191 F.3d 344, 352 (3d Cir. 1999) (quoting Furnco Const. Corp. v. Waters, 438 U.S. 567, 577
2 (1978))).⁸

3 If the plaintiff establishes a prima facie case of discrimination, the burden shifts to the 4 defendant to produce evidence of a legitimate nondiscriminatory reason for the challenged
5 employment action. See St. Mary's Honor Center v. Hicks, 509 U.S. 502, 506-07 (1993) (Title
6 VII case). "The legitimacy of the employer's proffered business justification will be affected both 7 by the duties and responsibilities of the employee's position and the nature of the justification.
8 Concomitantly, the significance of variations among an individual's personnel evaluations may 9 well depend upon the nature of the employee's responsibilities; a more exacting standard of 10 performance may have to be applied to positions of greater responsibility." Healy v. New York Life
11 Ins. Co., 860 F.2d 1209, 1214 (3d Cir. 1988) (ADEA case).

12 If the defendant meets its burden of producing evidence of a nondiscriminatory reason for 13 its action,⁹ the plaintiff must persuade the jury that the defendant's stated reason was merely a 14 pretext for age discrimination, or in some other way prove it more likely than not that age
15 motivated the employer. Texas Dept. of Community Affairs v. Burdine, 450 U.S. 248, 253 (1981)
16 (Title VII case). The plaintiff retains the ultimate burden of proving intentional discrimination.
17 Chipollini v. Spencer Gifts, Inc., 814 F.2d 893, 897 (3d Cir. 1987) (en banc) ("Under the ADEA,
18 the ultimate burden remains with the plaintiff to prove that age was a determinative factor in the

⁸ On the standards for proving age discrimination in reduction in force cases, see, e.g., Tomasso v. Boeing Co., 445 F.3d 702, 706 n.4 (3d Cir. 2006):

Ordinarily, to make out a prima facie case [of age discrimination] the plaintiff must show . . . that he was replaced by a sufficiently younger person to create an inference of age discrimination. Fakete v. Aetna, Inc., 308 F.3d 335, 338 (3d Cir. 2002). However, where an employee is terminated during a RIF, the [disputed question] becomes whether the employer retained employees who do not belong to the protected class.

See also Dreyer v. ARCO Chemical Co., 801 F.2d 651, 654 (3d Cir. 1986) (noting that in reduction of force cases "it is often impracticable to require a plaintiff whose job has been eliminated to show replacement"), overruled on other grounds by Hazen Paper Co. v. Biggins, 507 U.S. 604, 617 (1993); Anderson v. CONRAIL, 297 F.3d 242 (3d Cir. 2002) (in a reduction in force case, the plaintiff must show that a similarly situated substantially younger employee was retained).

⁹ The Committee has not attempted to draft an instruction for the (likely rare) case in which the defendant fails to articulate any legitimate nondiscriminatory reason for the adverse employment action. Regarding such cases, see St. Mary's Honor Ctr. v. Hicks, 509 U.S. 502, 509-10 & n.3 (1993) (stating that if the plaintiff presents evidence supporting the elements of the prima facie case and the defendant fails to articulate a legitimate nondiscriminatory reason, then "[i]f the finder of fact . . . finds that the prima facie case is supported by a preponderance of the evidence[,] it must find the existence of the presumed fact of unlawful discrimination and must, therefore, render a verdict for the plaintiff").

8.1.1 Disparate Treatment

1 defendant employer's decision. The plaintiff need not prove that age was the employer's sole or 2 exclusive consideration, but must prove that age made a difference in the decision.”¹⁰ The 3 factfinder's rejection of the employer's proffered reason allows, but does not compel, judgment
4 for the plaintiff. Reeves v. Sanderson Plumbing Products, Inc., 530 U.S. 133, 147 (2000) (“In 5 appropriate circumstances, the trier of fact can reasonably infer from the falsity of the explanation
6 that the employer is dissembling to cover up a discriminatory purpose.”). The employer's 7 proffered reason can be shown to be pretextual by circumstantial as well as direct evidence.
8 Chipollini v. Spencer Gifts, Inc., 814 F.2d 893 (3d Cir. 1987) (en banc) (ADEA case). “To 9 discredit the employer's proffered reason . . . the plaintiff cannot simply show that the employer's
10 decision was wrong or mistaken, since the factual dispute at issue is whether discriminatory animus
11 motivated the employer, not whether the employer is wise, shrewd, prudent or competent.” Keller
12 v. Orix Credit Alliance, Inc., 130 F.3d 1101, 1109 (3d Cir. 1997) (ADEA case). See also Tomasso
13 v. Boeing Co., 445 F.3d 702, 707 (3d Cir. 2006) (ADEA case) (noting that the employee “need not 14 always offer evidence sufficient to discredit all of the rationales advanced by the employer” 15 because “the rejection of some explanations may so undermine the employer's credibility as to 16 enable a rational factfinder to disbelieve the remaining rationales, even where the employee fails 17 to produce evidence particular to those rationales.”).

18 Miller v. Cigna Corp., 47 F.3d 586 (3d Cir. 1995) (en banc), was decided under the 19 assumption that ADEA mixed-motive cases were governed by a framework distinct from that

¹⁰ See also Burton v. Teleflex Inc., 707 F.3d 417, 427 (3d Cir. 2013) (ADEA and Title VII case)
 (“To make a showing of pretext, ‘the plaintiff must point to some evidence, direct or circumstantial, from which a factfinder could reasonably either (1) disbelieve the employer's articulated legitimate reasons; or (2) believe that an invidious discriminatory reason was more likely than not a motivating or determinative cause of the employer's action’” (quoting Fuentes
 v. Perskie, 32 F.3d 759, 764 (3d Cir. 1994))). The second of these two numbered alternatives was not at issue in Burton, because the court relied on the first alternative, holding that there was evidence that would justify a factfinder in disbelieving the employer's stated reason. See id. at 431.

In Willis v. UPMC Children's Hosp. of Pittsburgh, 808 F.3d 638 (3d Cir. 2015), the Court of Appeals offered more detail concerning the second alternative: “Pointing to evidence demonstrating any of the following satisfies this second way to prove pretext: (1) the defendant previously discriminated against the plaintiff; (2) the defendant discriminated against others within the plaintiff's protected class; or (3) the defendant has treated similarly situated, substantially younger individuals more favorably.” Id. at 645; see also id. at 649 (holding that the plaintiff “has not presented evidence that supports any of the three categories that would allow a factfinder to believe unlawful discrimination was more likely than not a motivating or determinative cause of her termination”).

Although the Burton and Willis courts phrased the second alternative in terms that seem to permit a finding of liability based on proof that discrimination was “a motivating . . . cause,” such an approach would appear to contravene the Gross Court's requirement of but-for causation.

8.1.1 Disparate Treatment

governing ADEA pretext cases. Obviously, that assumption is no longer good law after Gross, but the Miller court’s discussion of the appropriate instruction for an ADEA pretext case remains instructive:

A plaintiff in an ADEA case who does not qualify for a burden shifting instruction under Price Waterhouse [i.e., a “mixed-motive” case] has the burden of persuading the trier of fact by a preponderance of the evidence that there is a “but-for” causal connection between the plaintiff’s age and the employer’s adverse action -- i.e., that age “actually played a role in [the employer’s decisionmaking] process and had a determinative influence on the outcome” of that process.

Miller, 47 F.3d at 596-97 (quoting Hazen Paper Co. v. Biggins, 507 U.S. 604, 610 (1993)). The court in Miller reversed a verdict for the defendant because the trial judge instructed the jury that age must be the “sole cause” of the employer’s decision. That standard was too stringent; instead, in a pretext case, “plaintiff must prove by a preponderance of the evidence that age played a role in the employer’s decisionmaking process and that it had a determinative effect on the outcome of that process.”

Adverse Employment Action

As to the element of adverse employment action, the relevant statutory language in the ADEA is materially similar to that in Title VII. The ADEA makes it “unlawful for an employer ... to fail or refuse to hire or to discharge any individual or otherwise discriminate against any individual with respect to his compensation, terms, conditions, or privileges of employment, because of such individual’s age.” 29 U.S.C. § 623(a); compare 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2(a)(1) (similar provision in Title VII), which was construed in Muldrow v. City of St. Louis, 144 S. Ct. 967 (2024). The Committee accordingly has drafted the adverse employment action element in Instruction 8.1.1 to parallel that in Instructions 5.1.1 and 5.1.2. See Comment 5.1.1 for further discussion of the adverse employment action element in Title VII cases.

Seniority Distinct From Age

In Hazen Paper Co. v. Biggins, 507 U.S. 604, 611 (1993), the Court held that the ADEA does not prohibit discrimination on the basis of an employee’s seniority, as distinct from age. In Hazen, the employer fired the employee to prevent him from vesting in the pension plan. The Court found that the employer’s action was not prohibited by the ADEA. The Court reasoned as follows:

[T]he ADEA commands that “employers are to evaluate [older] employees . . . on their merits and not their age.” Western Air Lines, Inc. v. Criswell, 472 U.S. 400, 422 (1985). The employer cannot rely on age as a proxy for an employee’s remaining characteristics, such as productivity, but must instead focus on those factors directly.

When the employer’s decision is wholly motivated by factors other than age, the problem of inaccurate and stigmatizing stereotypes disappears. This is true even if the

8.1.1 Disparate Treatment

1 motivating factor is correlated with age, as pension status typically is. . . . On average, an 2 older employee has had more years in the work force than a younger employee, and thus 3 may well have accumulated more years of service with a particular employer. Yet an 4 employee's age is analytically distinct from his years of service. An employee who is 5 younger than 40, and therefore outside the class of older workers as defined by the ADEA,
6 see 29 U.S.C. § 631(a), may have worked for a particular employer his entire career, while 7 an older worker may have been newly hired. Because age and years of service are 8 analytically distinct, an employer can take account of one while ignoring the other, and 9 thus it is incorrect to say that a decision based on years of service is necessarily "age based."

10 . . .

11 We do not preclude the possibility that an employer who targets employees with a 12 particular pension status on the assumption that these employees are likely to be older 13 thereby engages in age discrimination. Pension status may be a proxy for age, not in the 14 sense that the ADEA makes the two factors equivalent, but in the sense that the employer
15 may suppose a correlation between the two factors and act accordingly. . . . Finally, we do
16 not consider the special case where an employee is about to vest in pension benefits as a
17 result of his age, rather than years of service, and the employer fires the employee in order
18 to prevent vesting. That case is not presented here. Our holding is simply that an employer
19 does not violate the ADEA just by interfering with an older employee's pension benefits 20 that would have vested by virtue of the employee's years of service.

21 See also Kentucky Retirement Systems v. EEOC, 554 U.S. 135, 148 (2008) ("Where an employer
22 adopts a pension plan that includes age as a factor, and that employer then treats employees 23 differently based on pension status, a plaintiff, to state a disparate treatment claim under the 24 ADEA, must adduce sufficient evidence to show that the differential treatment was 'actually 25 motivated' by age, not pension status."); Bryan v. Gov't of Virgin Islands, 916 F.3d 242, 247, 249
26 (3d Cir. 2019) (holding that a territorial law "[r]equiring that long-tenured employees who declined 27 to retire contribute 3% more of their salaries to the pension system each year ... did not 28 discriminate based on age" because it was motivated by financial considerations and the criterion 29 it employed – thirty years of service – was not "a direct proxy [that] could be masquerading as a 30 factor other than age"). The pattern instruction advises the jury to distinguish between age-related 31 discrimination and discrimination on other grounds that might correlate with age.

32 Discrimination on the Basis of Relative Youth

33 ADEA liability does not lie when a member of the protected class suffers discrimination
34 because she is too young. In General Dynamics Land Systems, Inc., v. Cline, 540 U.S. 581 (2004), 35 the employer retained health care benefits only for current employers who were older than 50. This 36 meant that employees within the protected age class of 40-50 were disintitiled. The Court rejected
37 an ADEA claim, relying on legislative history indicating that Congress intended to protect older 38 workers only; it did not prohibit favoring the old over the young. In sum, "ADEA protects only relatively older workers (over 40 [sic]) from discrimination favoring relatively younger ones (of any age).” Lewis & Norman, Employment Discrimination Law and Practice 428 (2d ed. 2004).

8.1.1 Disparate Treatment

8.1.2 Elements of an ADEA Claim — Harassment — Hostile Work Environment — Tangible Employment Action

Model

[Plaintiff] claims that [he/she] was subjected to harassment by [names] and that this harassment was motivated by [plaintiff’s] age.

[Employer] is liable for the actions of [names] in plaintiff’s claim of harassment if [plaintiff] proves all of the following elements by a preponderance of the evidence:

First: [Plaintiff] was subjected to [describe alleged conduct or conditions giving rise to plaintiff’s claim] by [names].

Second: [Names] conduct was not welcomed by [plaintiff].

Third: [Names] conduct was motivated by the fact that [plaintiff] was [state plaintiff’s age at the time of the alleged events giving rise to plaintiff’s claim; must have been age 40 or older].

Fourth: The conduct was so severe or pervasive that a reasonable person in [plaintiff’s] position would find [plaintiff’s] work environment to be hostile or abusive. This element requires you to look at the evidence from the point of view of a reasonable person of [plaintiff’s age]’s reaction to [plaintiff’s] work environment.

Fifth: [Plaintiff] believed [his/her] work environment to be hostile or abusive as a result of [names] conduct.

Sixth: [Plaintiff] suffered an adverse “tangible employment action” as a result of the hostile work environment; a tangible employment action is defined as a significant change in employment status, such as hiring, firing, failing to promote, reassignment with significantly different responsibilities, or a decision causing significant change in benefits.

Comment

There is little Third Circuit case law on whether the ADEA prohibits harassment on the basis of age. See Hildebrand v. Allegheny County, 923 F.3d 128, 137 (3d Cir. 2019) (holding that the plaintiff “allege[d] sufficient facts to plausibly state an ADEA claim” where he “adequately allege[d] a hostile work environment, including page upon page of disparate treatment and adverse employment decisions based on his age[,] ... claim[ed] he was retaliated against for complaining about the negative treatment, and ... allege[d] his age was the motivation for his termination”). At

8.1.2 Harassment – Hostile Work Environment – Tangible Employment Action

1 least two other circuits have recognized ADEA age-harassment claims. See Dediol v. Best
2 Chevrolet, Inc., 655 F.3d 435, 441 (5th Cir. 2011) (holding that a plaintiff can state a “hostile work
3 environment claim based on age discrimination under the ADEA” and enumerating the following 4 elements: “(1) [plaintiff] was over [sic] the age of 40; (2) the employee was subjected to 5 harassment, either through words or actions, based on age; (3) the nature of the harassment was 6 such that it created an objectively intimidating, hostile, or offensive work environment; and (4)
7 there exists some basis for liability on the part of the employer”); Crawford v. Medina Gen. Hosp.,
8 96 F.3d 830, 834 (6th Cir. 1996) (“While, as far as we can discern, no circuit has as yet applied
9 the hostile-environment doctrine in an ADEA action ... , we find it a relatively uncontroversial
10 proposition that such a theory is viable under the ADEA.”).

13 If the court wishes to provide a more detailed instruction on what constitutes a hostile work 14 environment, such an instruction is provided in 8.2.1.

15 It should be noted that constructive discharge is the adverse employment action that is most 16 common with claims of hostile work environment.¹¹ Instruction 8.2.2 provides an instruction
17 setting forth the relevant factors for a finding of constructive discharge. That instruction can be 18 used to amplify the term “adverse employment action” in appropriate cases.

19 The instruction’s definition of “tangible employment action” is taken from Burlington
20 Industries, Inc. v. Ellerth, 524 U.S. 742, 761 (1998).

¹¹ As Comment 8.1.3 notes (by analogy to the framework for Title VII hostile environment claims) the employer may raise an affirmative defense under Faragher v. Boca Raton, 524 U.S. 775 (1998), and Burlington Industries, Inc. v. Ellerth, 524 U.S. 742 (1998), if no tangible employment action has been taken against the plaintiff. In Pennsylvania State Police v. Suders, 542 U.S. 129, 140-41 (2004), the Court addressed the question of constructive discharge in a Title VII case, holding “that an employer does not have recourse to the Ellerth/ Faragher affirmative defense when a supervisor’s official act precipitates the constructive discharge; absent such a ‘tangible employment action,’ however, the defense is available to the employer whose supervisors are charged with harassment.” Assuming that the same approach applies in ADEA cases, Instruction 8.1.2 is appropriate for use in cases where the evidence supports a claim that the constructive discharge resulted from an official act or acts. However, where the constructive discharge did not result from an official act, an affirmative defense is available to the employer and Instruction 8.1.3 should be used instead.

8.1.2 Harassment – Hostile Work Environment – Tangible Employment Action

1 These ADEA instructions on harassment do not include a pattern instruction for quid pro
2 quo claims. This is because quid pro quo claims are almost invariably grounded in sex
3 discrimination, and the ADEA applies to age discrimination only. If an ADEA claim is ever raised
4 on quid pro quo grounds, the court can modify Instruction 5.1.3 for that occasion.

5 For further commentary on hostile work environment claims, see the Comment to 6 Instruction 5.1.4.

8.1.3 Harassment – Hostile Work Environment – No Tangible Employment Action

8.1.3 Elements of an ADEA Claim — Harassment — Hostile Work Environment — No Tangible Employment Action

Model

[Plaintiff] claims that [he/she] was subjected to harassment by [names] and that this harassment was motivated by [plaintiff's] age.

[Employer] is liable for the actions of [names] in [plaintiff's] claim of discriminatory harassment if [plaintiff] proves all of the following elements by a preponderance of the evidence:

First: [Plaintiff] was subjected to [describe alleged conduct or conditions giving rise to plaintiff's claim] by [names].

Second: [Names] conduct was not welcomed by [plaintiff].

Third: [Names] conduct was motivated by the fact that [plaintiff] was [state plaintiff's age at the time of the alleged events giving rise to plaintiff's claim; must have been age 40 or older].

Fourth: The conduct was so severe or pervasive that a reasonable person in [plaintiff's] position would find [plaintiff's] work environment to be hostile or abusive. This element requires you to look at the evidence from the point of view of a reasonable person of [plaintiff's age]'s reaction to [plaintiff's] work environment.

Fifth: [Plaintiff] believed [his/her] work environment to be hostile or abusive as a result of [names] conduct.

[For use when the alleged harassment is by non-supervisory employees:

Sixth: Management level employees knew, or should have known, of the abusive conduct and failed to take prompt and adequate remedial action. You can find that management level employees should have known of the abusive conduct if 1) an employee provided management level personnel with enough information to raise a probability of age harassment in the mind of a reasonable employer, or if 2) the harassment was so pervasive and open that a reasonable employer would have had to be aware of it.]

[In the event this Instruction is given, omit the following instruction regarding the employer's liability.]

If any of the above elements has not been proved by a preponderance of the evidence, your verdict must be for [defendant] and you need not proceed further in considering this claim. If you find that the elements have been proved, then you must further consider whether the employer is liable for such conduct. An employer may be liable for the actions of its supervisors as I will describe.

8.1.3 Harassment – Hostile Work Environment – No Tangible Employment Action

[Give instruction (A) when the facts permit a finding either of proxy liability or of presumptive liability subject to an affirmative defense. When the alleged individual harasser is not highly enough placed to create a triable issue of proxy liability, give only instruction (B).]

(A.) An employer is liable when the [individual harasser's name] is plaintiff's supervisor and either highly placed enough to be the proxy of the employer or, absent that, when the employer has failed to make out the affirmative defense.

With respect to proxy liability, the employer is strictly liable for the conduct of [name] if [name] is highly enough placed within the employer's hierarchy such as that [his/her] conduct is deemed that of the employer. To do so, [name] must exercise exceptional authority and control within the employer but need not be its chief executive officer. In making this determination, you may look at the employer's formal institutional structure, evidence of how decision-making in fact occurs on a day-to-day basis, and any other evidence you find establishes exceptional authority and control.

If you find proxy liability, the employer is liable for the harassment. If you find no proxy liability, the employer is still liable unless it has established an affirmative defense. I will instruct you now on the elements of that affirmative defense.

(B). If any of the above elements has not been proved by a preponderance of the evidence, your verdict must be for [defendant] and you need not proceed further in considering this claim. If you find that the elements have been proved, then you must consider whether [name] is the plaintiff's supervisor. If you so find, you must find for plaintiff unless you also find that the [employer] has proven an affirmative defense by a preponderance of the evidence. I will instruct you now on the elements of that affirmative defense.

You must find for [defendant] if you find that [defendant] has proved both of the following elements by a preponderance of the evidence:

First: That [defendant] exercised reasonable care to prevent harassment in the workplace on the basis of age, and also exercised reasonable care to promptly correct any harassing behavior that does occur.

Second: That [plaintiff] unreasonably failed to take advantage of any preventive or corrective opportunities provided by [defendant].

Proof of the following facts will be enough to establish the first element that I just referred to, concerning prevention and correction of harassment:

1. [Defendant] had established an explicit policy against harassment in the workplace on the basis of age.

2. That policy was fully communicated to its employees.

8.1.3 Harassment – Hostile Work Environment – No Tangible Employment Action

3. That policy provided a reasonable way for [plaintiff] to make a claim of harassment to higher management.

4. Reasonable steps were taken to correct the problem, if raised by [plaintiff].

On the other hand, proof that [plaintiff] did not follow a reasonable complaint procedure provided by [defendant] will ordinarily be enough to establish that [plaintiff] unreasonably failed to take advantage of a corrective opportunity.

Comment

Caselaw supporting the availability of hostile-work-environment claims under the ADEA is discussed in Comment 8.1.2.

This instruction is substantively identical to Instruction 5.1.5, covering hostile work environment claims with no tangible employment action under Title VII. Like Title VII — and unlike Section 1981 — the ADEA regulates employers only, and not individual employees. Therefore, the instruction is written in terms of employer liability for the acts of its employees.

This instruction is to be used in discriminatory harassment cases where the plaintiff did not suffer any “tangible” employment action such as discharge or demotion, but rather suffered “intangible” harm flowing from harassment that is “sufficiently severe or pervasive to create a hostile work environment.” Faragher v. Boca Raton, 524 U.S. 775, 808 (1998). In Faragher and in Burlington Industries, Inc. v. Ellerth, 524 U.S. 742 (1998), the Court held that an employer is strictly liable for supervisor harassment that “culminates in a tangible employment action, such as discharge, demotion, or undesirable reassignment.” Ellerth, 524 U.S. at 765. But when no such tangible action is taken, the employer may still be liable for harassment by supervisors. Such liability arises in two situations. The first is when the supervisor in question is highly enough placed within the institutional employer to be its “proxy” or “alter ego.” The second is where the employer fails to establish an affirmative defense to the presumptive liability that arises from supervisory harassment even when there is no tangible employment action.

In O’Brien v. Middle E. Forum, 57 F.4th 110 (3d Cir. 2023), the Third Circuit “now join[s] our sister Circuit Courts of Appeals and hold[s] that the Faragher/Ellerth defense is unavailable when the alleged harasser is the employer’s proxy or alter ego.” Id. at 120. The opinion used the two terms interchangeably, but the model instruction uses only “proxy” for the sake of simplicity. As for what suffices to satisfy this standard, the rationale for liability is that the institutional employer is itself acting when the harassing conduct is by a proxy or alter ego. Thus, while “merely serving as a supervisor with some amount of control over a subordinate does not establish proxy status,” such status can be found “where ‘an official... [is] high enough in the management hierarchy that his actions ‘speak’ for the employer.’” O’Brien cautioned that “only individuals with exceptional authority and control within an organization” can meet this standard. 57 F.4th at 121 (quoting Helm v. Kansas, 656 F.3d 1277, 1286 (10th Cir. 2011)).

8.1.3 Harassment – Hostile Work Environment – No Tangible Employment Action

Applying this concept to the case at hand, the alleged harasser was Gregg Roman, plaintiff's direct supervisor, and the Court found a triable issue as to his being a proxy for the Forum. It wrote:

Roman served as the Chief Operating Officer, Director, and Secretary of the Board. The jury heard testimony that . . . he was second in command at the Forum, and was poised to "be the successor to become president of the organization." There was testimony that his job was to "run[] the administration" of the organization; he was the "man in charge" of dictating policies for the day-to-day governance of the Forum's main Philadelphia office, and he was "responsible for all of the administration oversight with anybody that worked at the Forum." The jury also heard testimony about his public-facing role which included making media appearances on behalf of the Forum.

O'Brien, 57 F.4th at 121-22 (citations omitted). The model instructions look to this paragraph to frame the evidence that may be relevant to the proxy decision in terms of institutional structure, day-to-day operations, and other evidence.

If proxy liability is not established, an employer may still be liable for supervisor harassment even when no tangible employment action is taken. Such liability arises from the harassing actions of a supervisor unless the employer establishes an affirmative defense. To prevail on the basis of the defense, the employer must prove that "(a) [it] exercised reasonable care to prevent and correct promptly any sexually harassing behavior," and that (b) the employee "unreasonably failed to take advantage of any preventive or corrective opportunities provided by the employer or to avoid harm otherwise." Ellerth, 524 U.S. at 751 (1998).

Besides the affirmative defense provided by Ellerth, the absence of a tangible employment action also justifies requiring the plaintiff to prove a further element, in order to protect the employer from unwarranted liability for the discriminatory acts of its non-supervisor employees.¹² Respondeat superior liability for the acts of non-supervisory employees exists only where "the defendant knew or should have known of the harassment and failed to take prompt remedial action." Andrews v. City of Philadelphia, 895 F.2d 1469, 1486 (3d Cir. 1990).

If the court wishes to provide a more detailed instruction on what constitutes a hostile work environment, such an instruction is provided in 8.2.1.

¹² In the context of Title VII claims, the Supreme Court has held that "an employee is a 'supervisor' for purposes of vicarious liability . . . if he or she is empowered by the employer to take tangible employment actions against the victim." Vance v. Ball State University, 133 S. Ct. 2434, 2439 (2013). For further discussion of Vance, see Comment 5.1.5.

8.1.3 Harassment – Hostile Work Environment – No Tangible Employment Action

1 These ADEA instructions on harassment do not include a pattern instruction for quid pro
2 quo claims. This is because quid pro quo claims are almost invariably grounded in sex
3 discrimination, and the ADEA applies to age discrimination only. If an ADEA claim is ever raised
4 on quid pro quo grounds, the court can modify Instruction 5.1.3 for that occasion.

5 For further commentary on hostile work environment claims, see Instructions 5.1.4 and 6 5.1.5.

8.1.4 Elements of an ADEA Claim–Disparate Impact

Model

In this case, [plaintiff] claims that [defendant], by [describe employment practice], has caused an adverse, disproportionate impact on persons [40] years of age or older. The parties agree that [defendant’s] conduct is neutral on its face, but [plaintiff] contends that in fact people [40] and older have been treated more harshly by [defendant]. This is what is known in the law as “disparate impact.”

To find a disparate impact, you do not need to consider whether [defendant] intended to discriminate against persons [40] and older. You must focus on the consequences or results of specific employment practices.

To recover on [his/her] claim of disparate impact, [plaintiff] must prove both of the following by a preponderance of the evidence.

First: [Defendant] has engaged in a specific employment practice or practices that caused [defendant] to [fail to hire]¹³ [fail to promote] [demote] [terminate] [constructively discharge][plaintiff] because [plaintiff] was [[40] or older].

Second: [Defendant’s] [describe employment practice] had a significantly disproportionate adverse impact on persons [40] years of age or older.

Note that it is not enough for [plaintiff] to prove that workers [40] and older have suffered a disparate impact. Nor is it enough to allege that some generalized policy is responsible for a disparate impact. Instead, [plaintiff] must prove that a specific employment practice or practices caused the disproportionate adverse impact on persons [40] years of age or older.

[Affirmative Defense:

[Defendant] contends that [describe employment practice] was based on reasonable factors other than age. [Defendant] has the burden of proving each of the following elements by a preponderance of the evidence:

First: [Describe employment practice] is based on factors other than the age of [the plaintiff] [those similarly situated];

Second: [Insert justification for factors] is a legitimate interest of the defendant’s business; and ¹³ The Third Circuit has not taken a position as to whether the disparate impact theory is available to challenge hiring discrimination.

8.1.4 Disparate Impact

1 Third: [Describe employment practice] is reasonably related to achieving [insert
2 justification for factors].

3 If you find that [plaintiff] has proved each of the elements on which [he/she] has the burden
4 of proof, your verdict should be for [plaintiff], unless you also find that [defendant] has proved 5 this affirmative defense, in which event your verdict should be for [defendant].]

7 Comment

8 Right to Jury Trial

9 Unlike Title VII, the ADEA provides a right to jury trial for all claims covered by the Act,
10 including, now, disparate impact claims. See 29 U.S.C. § 626(c)(2) (“[A] person shall be entitled
11 to a trial by jury of any issue of fact in any [ADEA] action . . . regardless of whether equitable 12 relief is sought by any party in such action.”).

13 Comparison to Disparate Treatment Claims

14 An ADEA plaintiff may claim either disparate treatment or disparate impact. As discussed
15 in Comment 8.1.1, a disparate-treatment claim seeks to show intentional discrimination – i.e., that 16 “age was the ‘reason’ that the employer decided to act.” Gross v. FBL Fin. Servs., Inc., 557 U.S.
17 167, 176 (2009). By contrast, a plaintiff bringing a disparate-impact claim need not show intent to 18 discriminate. Under a disparate-impact theory, “an employer who classifies his employees without 19 respect to age may still be liable . . . if such classification adversely affects the employee because 20 of that employee’s age.” Meacham v. Knolls Atomic Power Lab., 554 U.S. 84, 95-96 (2008)
21 (internal quotation marks omitted).

22 Comparison to Title VII Disparate Impact Claims

23 In Smith v. City of Jackson, 544 U.S. 228 (2005), the Court held that the ADEA authorizes 24 recovery on disparate impact claims, comparable to the claim established in Griggs v. Duke Power
25 Co., 401 U.S. 424 (1971), which announced a disparate impact theory of recovery in Title VII
26 cases. The Court observed, however, that the disparate impact ground of recovery in the ADEA
27 is narrower than that provided in Title VII, in two respects. First, the ADEA permits a disparate
28 impact “where the differentiation is based on reasonable factors other than age.” 29 U.S.C. §
29 623(f)(1). Second, the 1991 amendment to Title VII modified the Supreme Court’s holding in 30 Wards Cove Packing v. Atonio, 490 U.S. 642 (1989), in which the Court narrowly construed the 31 employer’s exposure to disparate-impact liability under Title VII. Because the 1991 amendment
32 did not affect the ADEA, it follows that the standards of Wards Cove remain applicable to disparate
33 impact actions under the ADEA. Under Wards Cove, “it is not enough to simply allege that there 34 is a disparate impact on workers, or point to a generalized policy that leads to such an impact.
35 Rather, the employee is responsible for isolating and identifying the specific employment practices
36 that are allegedly responsible for any observed statistical disparities.” Smith v. Jackson, 544 U.S.
37 at 235 (emphasis in original); see also Karlo v. Pittsburgh Glass Works, LLC, 849 F.3d 61, 70 (3d

8.1.4 Disparate Impact

1 Cir. 2017) (“Congress stripped that requirement from Title VII when it amended the statute in 2 1991, but it remains operative under the ADEA.”) (citing Smith, 544 U.S. at 240).

3 Prima Facie Case

4 “To state a prima facie case for disparate impact under the ADEA, a plaintiff must (1)
5 identify a specific, facially neutral policy, and (2) proffer statistical evidence that the policy caused 6 a significant age-based disparity.” Karlo v. Pittsburgh Glass Works, LLC, 849 F.3d 61, 69 (3d Cir.
7 2017). The age-based disparity may be shown by comparing the effects on 40-and-older workers
8 to those on younger-than-40 workers,¹⁴ or by using a dividing line higher than 40 years of age
9 (e.g., by comparing the effects on 50-and-older workers to those on younger-than-50 workers). See 10 Karlo, 849 F.3d at 72 (“A specific, facially neutral policy that significantly disfavors employees 11 over fifty years old supports a claim of disparate impact under the plain text of § 623(a)(2).”).¹⁵

12 Affirmative Defense for Reasonable Factors Other Than Age

13 A facially-age-neutral practice that disparately affects older workers is not barred by the 14 ADEA “where the differentiation is based on reasonable factors other than age.” 29 U.S.C.
15 § 623(f)(1). The Supreme Court has distinguished this “reasonable factors other than age”
16 (“RFOA”) defense from a business-necessity defense. For example, in Smith v. City of Jackson, 17 544 U.S. 228 (2005), the Court affirmed the dismissal of the plaintiffs’ disparate-impact claims, 18 reasoning that “the City’s decision to grant a larger raise to lower echelon employees for the 19 purpose of bringing salaries in line with that of surrounding police forces was a decision based on 20 a ‘reasonable facto[r] other than age’ that responded to the City’s legitimate goal of retaining police
21 officers.” Smith, 544 U.S. at 242. The Court explained: “While there may have been other 22 reasonable ways for the City to achieve its goals, the one selected was not unreasonable. Unlike 23 the business necessity test, which asks whether there are other ways for the employer to achieve
24 its goals that do not result in a disparate impact on a protected class, the reasonableness inquiry
25 includes no such requirement.” Id. at 243.¹⁶ A few years later, in the course of explaining its 26 holding that the RFOA defense is an affirmative defense on which the defendant bears the burdens
27 of both production and persuasion, see Meacham v. Knolls Atomic Power Lab., 554 U.S. 84, 87

¹⁴ See 29 U.S.C. § 631(a) (“The prohibitions in this chapter shall be limited to individuals who are at least 40 years of age.”).

¹⁵ This “subgroup” approach to ADEA disparate-impact claims works for “subgroups with ‘lower boundaries,’ not ‘upper boundaries.’” Karlo, 849 F.3d at 77. Thus, for example, the approach would not permit comparison of the impact on “a ‘banded’ 50-to-55 subgroup” to the impact on those outside the banded subgroup. Id. (noting that “the ADEA protects only ‘relatively old worker[s] from discrimination that works to the advantage of the relatively young’” (quoting Gen. Dynamics Land Sys., Inc. v. Cline, 540 U.S. 581, 590–91 (2004))).

¹⁶ See also Karlo, 849 F.3d at 84 (“When a defendant proffers a RFOA, the plaintiff can rebut it by showing that the factor relied upon is unreasonable, not by identifying twenty other practices that would have been reasonable instead.”).

8.1.4 Disparate Impact

1 (2008), the Court declared itself “satisfied that the business necessity test should have no place in 2 ADEA disparate-impact cases,” id. at 97. The Court of Appeals has described the defendant’s task
3 (with respect to the RFOA defense) as a “relatively light burden.” Bryan v. Gov’t of Virgin
4 Islands, 916 F.3d 242, 248-49 (3d Cir. 2019) (rejecting a disparate-impact ADEA challenge to a 5 territorial law “[r]equiring that long-tenured employees who declined to retire contribute 3% more
6 of their salaries to the pension system each year” on the ground that the law “reasonably targets
7 long-tenured employees with higher salaries—not all older workers—to encourage them to retire
8 from the Government payroll and to pay more into the pension system”).

8.1.5 Elements of an ADEA Claim — Retaliation

Model

[Plaintiff] claims that [defendant] discriminated against [him/her] because of [plaintiff's] [describe protected activity].

To prevail on this claim, [plaintiff] must prove all of the following by a preponderance of the evidence:

First: [Plaintiff] [describe activity protected by the ADEA].

Second: [Plaintiff] was subjected to a materially adverse action at the time, or after, the protected conduct took place.

Third: There was a causal connection between [describe challenged activity] and [plaintiff's] [describe plaintiff's protected activity].

Concerning the first element, [plaintiff] need not prove the merits of [his/her] [describe plaintiff's activity], but only that [he/she] was acting under a reasonable,¹⁷ good faith belief that [plaintiff's] [or someone else's] rights under the Age Discrimination in Employment Act were violated.

Concerning the second element, the term “materially adverse” means that [plaintiff] must show [describe alleged retaliatory activity] was serious enough that it well might have discouraged a reasonable worker from [describe plaintiff's protected activity]. [The activity need not be related to the workplace or to [plaintiff's] employment.]

Concerning the third element, that of causal connection, that connection may be shown in many ways. For example, you may or may not find that there is a sufficient connection through timing, that is [defendant's] action followed shortly after [defendant] became aware of [plaintiff's] [describe activity]. Causation is, however, not necessarily ruled out by a more extended passage of time. Causation may or may not be proven by antagonism shown toward [plaintiff] or a change in demeanor toward [plaintiff].

Ultimately, you must decide whether [plaintiff's] [protected activity] had a determinative effect on [describe alleged retaliatory activity]. “Determinative effect” means that if not for [plaintiff's] [protected activity], [describe alleged retaliatory activity] would not have occurred.

Comment

¹⁷ See the Comment for a discussion of the allocation of responsibility for determining the reasonableness of the plaintiff's belief.

8.1.5 Retaliation

The ADEA provides a cause of action for retaliation:

(d) Opposition to unlawful practices; participation in investigations, proceedings, or litigation. It shall be unlawful for an employer to discriminate against any of his employees or applicants for employment, for an employment agency to discriminate against any individual, or for a labor organization to discriminate against any member thereof or applicant for membership, because such individual, member or applicant for membership has opposed any practice made unlawful by this section, or because such individual, member or applicant for membership has made a charge, testified, assisted, or participated in any manner in an investigation, proceeding, or litigation under this Act.

29 U.S.C. § 623(d). This section applies to protect employees in the private sector; the ADEA provision covering federal employees, see 29 U.S.C. §633a(a), does not contain an explicit provision on retaliation. However, the Supreme Court in Gomez-Perez v. Potter, 128 S. Ct. 1931, 1943 (2008), held “that § 633a(a) prohibits retaliation against a federal employee who complains of age discrimination.”

The substantive standards for a retaliation claim under the ADEA are generally the same as those applied to Title VII retaliation claims. Lewis and Norman, Employment Discrimination 453 (2d ed. 2004) (“Section 623(d) of ADEA provides protection against retaliation in the same terms as § 704(a) of Title VII.”) ; Daniels v. Sch. Dist. of Philadelphia, 776 F.3d 181, 192 (3d Cir. 2015) (addressing retaliation claims under Title VII, the ADEA, and the Pennsylvania Human Rights Act “together[,] as the circumstances of this case do not require that we make differing analyses”).

Protected Activity

The most common activities protected from retaliation under the ADEA and Title VII are: 1) opposing or complaining about discrimination;¹⁸ 2) making a charge of employment discrimination; 3) testifying, assisting or participating in any manner in an investigation, proceeding or hearing under the ADEA. See the discussion of protected activity in the Comment to Instruction 5.1.7. See also Fasold v. Justice, 409 F.3d 178, 188 (3d Cir. 2005) (filing a complaint with the EEOC is protected activity); Robinson v. City of Pittsburgh, 120 F.3d 1286, 1299 (3d Cir.

¹⁸ Where an employer conditioned its conversion of terminated at-will employees into independent contractors on the employees’ signing releases of all existing claims (including but not limited to discrimination claims), an employee’s refusal to sign that release did not constitute opposition within the meaning of the ADEA’s anti-retaliation provision: “[R]efusing to sign a release ... does not communicate opposition sufficiently specific to qualify as protected employee activity.... Because Allstate’s Release barred its signatories from bringing any claims against Allstate concerning their employment or termination, employee agents who refused to sign it might have done so for any number of reasons unrelated to discrimination.” E.E.O.C. v. Allstate Ins. Co., 778 F.3d 444, 452 (3d Cir. 2015).

Sungard Data Sys., Inc.*, 109 F.3d 173, 177 (3d Cir. 1997) (advocating equal treatment was protected activity); Aman v. Cort Furniture, 85 F.3d 1074, 1085 (3d Cir. 1989) (under Title VII’s anti-retaliation provision “a plaintiff need not prove the merits of the underlying discrimination complaint, but only that ‘he was acting under a good faith, reasonable belief that a violation existed.’” (quoting Griffiths v. CIGNA Corp., 988 F.2d 457, 468 (3d Cir. 1993) (quoting Sumner v. United States Postal Service, 899 F.2d 203, 209 (2d Cir. 1990))), overruled on other grounds by Miller v. CIGNA Corp., 47 F.3d 586 (3d Cir. 1995))).

In accord with instructions from other circuits, Instruction 8.1.5 directs the jury to determine both the good faith and the reasonableness of the plaintiff’s belief that employment discrimination had occurred. See Seventh Circuit Committee Comment to Instruction 3.02 (2017) (noting that, where contested in Title VII, § 1981, and ADEA cases, plaintiff must show protected activity was based on “reasonable, good faith belief [of discrimination]”); Eleventh Circuit Instruction 4.22 (2024) (noting that action is protected if based on plaintiff’s “good-faith, reasonable belief” that defendant discriminated based on protected trait for claims under Section 1981, Title VII, ADEA, ADA, and FLSA); Eighth Circuit Instruction 10.41 (2023) (stating plaintiff must show “plaintiff reasonably believed” there was harassment in Title VII, ADEA, ADA, and FMLA cases); id. Notes on Use, Note 5 (“employees are protected [under Title VII, ADEA, ADA, FMLA, and others] if they opposed an employment practice that they reasonably and in good faith believe to be unlawful.”)); cf. Fifth Circuit Committee Note to Instruction 11.5 (2020) (noting plaintiff must “prove that he or she had a reasonable good-faith belief that the practice was unlawful under Title VII” to prove Title VII retaliation); id. Instruction 11.7 (citing Instruction 11.5 in ADEA—Retaliation instruction); Ninth Circuit Instruction & Comment 10.8 (2024) (discussing reasonable belief requirement in comment but not in the model Title VII instruction); id. Comment 11.3 (adopting Title VII instruction 10.8 for ADEA claims). Standard for Actionable Retaliation

The Supreme Court in Burlington N. & S.F. Ry. v. White, 548 U.S. 53, 68 (2006), held that a cause of action for retaliation under Title VII lies whenever the employer responds to protected activity in such a way “that a reasonable employee would have found the challenged action materially adverse, which in this context means it well might have dissuaded a reasonable worker from making or supporting a charge of discrimination.” (internal quotation marks and citations omitted).¹⁹ The Court elaborated on this standard in the following passage:

¹⁹ Where an employer terminated at-will employees but offered them a chance to serve as independent contractors if they signed releases of all existing claims (including but not limited to discrimination claims), the employer’s denial of the independent-contractor arrangement to terminated employees who refused to sign that release did not constitute an adverse action for purposes of the ADEA’s anti-retaliation provision. E.E.O.C. v. Allstate Ins. Co., 778 F.3d 444, 452 (3d Cir. 2015) (“[T]he terminated agents were not entitled to convert to independent

8.1.5 Retaliation

We speak of material adversity because we believe it is important to separate significant from trivial harms. Title VII, we have said, does not set forth “a general civility code for the American workplace.” Oncale v. Sundowner Offshore Services, Inc., 523 U.S. 75, 80, 118 S. Ct. 998, 140 L. Ed. 2d 201 (1998). An employee’s decision to report discriminatory behavior cannot immunize that employee from those petty slights or minor annoyances that often take place at work and that all employees experience. See 1 B. Lindemann & P. Grossman, Employment Discrimination Law 669 (3d ed. 1996) (noting that “courts have held that personality conflicts at work that generate antipathy” and “‘snubbing’ by supervisors and co-workers” are not actionable under § 704(a)). The anti-retaliation provision seeks to prevent employer interference with “unfettered access” to Title VII’s remedial mechanisms. It does so by prohibiting employer actions that are likely “to deter victims of discrimination from complaining to the EEOC,” the courts, and their employers. And normally petty slights, minor annoyances, and simple lack of good manners will not create such deterrence. See 2 EEOC 1998 Manual § 8, p. 8-13.

We refer to reactions of a reasonable employee because we believe that the provision’s standard for judging harm must be objective. An objective standard is judicially administrable. It avoids the uncertainties and unfair discrepancies that can plague a judicial effort to determine a plaintiff’s unusual subjective feelings. We have emphasized the need for objective standards in other Title VII contexts, and those same concerns animate our decision here. See, e.g., [Pennsylvania State Police v.] Suders, 542 U.S., at 141, 124 S. Ct. 2342, 159 L. Ed. 2d 204 (constructive discharge doctrine); Harris v. Forklift Systems, Inc., 510 U.S. 17, 21, 114 S. Ct. 367, 126 L. Ed. 2d 295 (1993) (hostile work environment doctrine).

We phrase the standard in general terms because the significance of any given act of retaliation will often depend upon the particular circumstances. . . . A schedule change in an employee’s work schedule may make little difference to many workers, but may matter enormously to a young mother with school age children. A supervisor’s refusal to invite an employee to lunch is normally trivial, a nonactionable petty slight. But to retaliate by excluding an employee from a weekly training lunch that contributes significantly to the employee’s professional advancement might well deter a reasonable employee from complaining about discrimination. Hence, a legal standard that speaks in general terms rather than specific prohibited acts is preferable, for an act that would be immaterial in some situations is material in others.

Finally, we note that . . . the standard is tied to the challenged retaliatory act, not the underlying conduct that forms the basis of the Title VII complaint. By focusing on the materiality of the challenged action and the perspective of a reasonable person in the contractor status.... And the [EEOC] has cited no legal authority for the proposition that an employer commits an adverse action by denying an employee an unearned benefit on the basis of the employee’s refusal to sign a release.”).

8.1.5 Retaliation

1 plaintiff's position, we believe this standard will screen out trivial conduct while effectively
2 capturing those acts that are likely to dissuade employees from complaining or assisting in 3 complaints about discrimination.

4 548 U.S. at 68-70 (some citations omitted).

5 The anti-retaliation provision of Title VII, construed by the Court in White, is substantively
6 identical to the ADEA provision on retaliation, supra. This instruction therefore follows the 7 guidelines of the Supreme Court's decision in White.

8 No Requirement That Retaliation Be Job-Related To Be Actionable

9 The Supreme Court in Burlington N. & S.F. Ry. v. White, 126 S. Ct. 2405, 2413 (2006),
10 held that retaliation need not be job-related to be actionable under Title VII. In doing so, the 11 Court rejected authority from the Third Circuit (and others) requiring that the plaintiff suffer an 12 adverse employment action in order to recover for retaliation. The Court distinguished Title VII's 13 retaliation provision from its basic anti-discrimination provision, which does require an adverse 14 employment action. The Court noted that unlike the basic anti-discrimination provision, which 15 refers to conditions of employment, the anti-retaliation provision is broadly worded to prohibit any 16 discrimination by an employer in response to protected activity.

17 Because the ADEA anti-retaliation provision is substantively identical to the Title VII 18 provision construed in White — it broadly prohibits discrimination without reference to 19 employment-related decisions — this instruction contains bracketed material to cover a plaintiff's 20 claim for retaliation that is not job-related.

21 It should be noted, however, that damages for emotional distress and pain and suffering are 22 not recoverable under the ADEA. Rogers v. Exxon Research and Engineering Co., 550 F.2d 834,
23 842 (3d Cir. 1977) (relying on legislative history tying recovery under the ADEA to that provided
24 by the Fair Labor Standards Act, and not Title VII; holding that “damages for pain and suffering 25 or emotional distress cannot properly be awarded in ADEA cases”), overruled on other grounds
26 by Holliday v. Ketchum, MacLeod & Grove, Inc., 584 F.2d 1221 (3d Cir. 1978) (en banc). So, to 27 the extent that retaliatory activity is not job-related, it is probably less likely to be compensable 28 under the ADEA than it is under Title VII. For further discussion of White, see the Comment to 29 Instruction 5.1.7.

30 Retaliation for another's protected activity

31 The Supreme Court held in Thompson v. North American Stainless, LP, 131 S. Ct. 863
32 (2011), that Title VII not only bars retaliation against the employee who engaged in the protected 33 activity, it also bars retaliation against another employee if the circumstances are such that the 34 retaliation against that employee might well dissuade a reasonable worker from engaging in 35 protected activity. See id. at 868. The Thompson Court did not discuss whether its holding 36 extends to retaliation claims under other statutory schemes such as the ADEA. The

8.1.5 Retaliation

Thompson Court’s holding that the third-party retaliation victim can sometimes assert a retaliation claim under Title VII rested on the Court’s analysis of the specific statutory language of Title VII. See Thompson, 131 S. Ct. at 869 (analyzing language in 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(f)(1) stating that “a civil action may be brought ... by the person claiming to be aggrieved”). The ADEA contains similar language. See 29 U.S.C. § 626(c)(1) (“Any person aggrieved may bring a civil action in any court of competent jurisdiction for such legal or equitable relief as will effectuate the purposes of this chapter”). For further discussion of Thompson, see Comment 5.1.7. For a pre-Thompson Third Circuit case holding that the ADEA does not encompass third-party retaliation claims, see Fogleman v. Mercy Hosp., Inc., 283 F.3d 561, 570 (3d Cir. 2002).

Determinative Effect

As discussed in Comment 8.1.1, the Supreme Court has held with respect to non-retaliation ADEA claims that the plaintiff must prove but-for causation (and thus that a mixed-motive burden-shifting framework is unavailable). See Gross v. FBL Financial Services, Inc., 557 U.S. 167, 177-78 (2009). Although the Gross Court was interpreting 29 U.S.C. § 636(a), its reasoning seems equally applicable to 29 U.S.C. § 636(d) (the ADEA’s anti-retaliation provision). And this view also seems consistent with the Court’s more recent decision in University of Texas Southwestern Medical Center v. Nassar, 133 S. Ct. 2517, 2528 (2013) (holding “that Title VII retaliation claims require proof that the desire to retaliate was the but-for cause of the challenged employment action”); id. at 2531-32 (discussing policy concerns relating to the standard of proof for retaliation claims).²⁰ Accordingly, Instruction 8.1.5 requires the plaintiff to prove that the plaintiff’s protected activity had a determinative effect on the defendant’s retaliatory activity.

Causation for Federal Employees

Babb v. Wilkie, 140 S. Ct. 1168 (2020), recognized a modified causation structure for ADEA discrimination claims under 29 U.S.C. § 633(a). See comment to Instruction 8.0. That provision has also been held to bar retaliation, despite the absence of explicit language to that effect. Gomez-Perez v. Potter, 128 S. Ct. 1931 (2008). It is possible, therefore, that the Babb’s structure will apply to ADEA retaliation claims by federal employees.

Non-retaliatory Reason; Pretext

As with other types of discrimination or retaliation claims, the defendant may proffer a non-retaliatory reason for its employment decision, and the plaintiff may seek to rebut that reason

²⁰ See also DiFiore v. CSL Behring, LLC, 879 F.3d 71, 78 (3d Cir. 2018) (holding that a mixed-motive framework is unavailable for False Claims Act retaliation claims because “the language of the FCA anti-retaliation provision uses the same ‘because of’ language that compelled the Supreme Court to require ‘but-for’ causation in Nassar and Gross”).

8.1.5 Retaliation

1 by showing that it was really a cover-up for retaliation. See, e.g., Daniels v. School District of 2 Philadelphia, 776 F.3d 181, 198 (3d Cir. 2015) (upholding grant of summary judgment against 3 plaintiff on retaliation claims under, inter alia, the ADEA, because the defendant had “proffered
4 legitimate reasons for [its] adverse actions, which Daniels has failed to rebut”).

5 Employer’s Attitude Toward Employee

6 On the relevance of an employer’s attitude toward an employee who engaged in protected
7 activity, see Fasold v. Justice, 409 F.3d 178, 190 (3d Cir. 2005) (reversing a grant of summary
8 judgment for an employer on an ADEA retaliation claim and noting that “we cannot discount the 9 possibility that [the supervisor’s] irritation with Fasold’s pending administrative claims influenced 10 the calculus [the supervisor] made in his decision to deny the Level II grievance.”).

11 Retaliation Against Perceived Protected Activity

12 In Fogleman v. Mercy Hospital, Inc., 283 F.3d 561, 562 (3d Cir. 2002), the court held that 13 anti-retaliation provisions in the Americans with Disabilities Act, the Age Discrimination in 14 Employment Act, and Pennsylvania state law extended to retaliation for “perceived” protected 15 activity. “Because the statutes forbid an employer’s taking adverse action against an employee for 16 discriminatory reasons, it does not matter whether the factual basis for the employer’s 17 discriminatory animus was correct[;] ... so long as the employer’s specific intent was 18 discriminatory, the retaliation is actionable.” 283 F.3d at 562. If the fairly unusual case arises in 19 which the employer is alleged to have retaliated for perceived rather than actual protected activity, 20 then the instruction can be modified consistently with the court’s directive in Fogleman.

8.2.1 Hostile or Abusive Work Environment

8.2.1 ADEA Definitions — Hostile or Abusive Work Environment

Model

In determining whether a work environment is “hostile” you must look at all of the circumstances, which may include:

- The total physical environment of [plaintiff’s] work area.
- The degree and type of language and insult that filled the environment before and after [plaintiff] arrived.
- The reasonable expectations of [plaintiff] upon entering the environment.
- The frequency of the offensive conduct.
- The severity of the conduct.
- The effect of the working environment on [plaintiff’s] mental and emotional well-being.
- Whether the conduct was unwelcome, that is, conduct [plaintiff] regarded as unwanted or unpleasant.
- Whether the conduct was pervasive.
- Whether the conduct was directed toward [plaintiff].
- Whether the conduct was physically threatening or humiliating.
- Whether the conduct was merely a tasteless remark.
- Whether the conduct unreasonably interfered with [plaintiff’s] work performance.

Conduct that amounts only to ordinary socializing in the workplace, such as occasional horseplay, occasional use of abusive language, tasteless jokes, and occasional teasing, does not constitute an abusive or hostile work environment. A hostile work environment can be found only if there is extreme conduct amounting to a material change in the terms and conditions of employment. Moreover, isolated incidents, unless extremely serious, will not amount to a hostile work environment.

It is not enough that the work environment was generally harsh, unfriendly, unpleasant, crude or vulgar to all employees. In order to find a hostile work environment, you must find that [plaintiff] was harassed because of [his/her] age. The harassing conduct may, but need not be age-based in nature. Rather, its defining characteristic is that the harassment complained of was linked to [plaintiff’s] age. The key question is whether [plaintiff], as a person of [plaintiff’s age] was subjected to harsh employment conditions to which substantially younger employees were not.

8.2.1 Hostile or Abusive Work Environment

1 It is important to understand that, in determining whether a hostile work environment
2 existed at the [employer's workplace] you must consider the evidence from the perspective of a
3 reasonable person of [plaintiff's age] in the same position. That is, you must determine whether a 4 reasonable person of [plaintiff's age] would have been offended or harmed by the conduct in 5 question. You must evaluate the total circumstances and determine whether the alleged harassing 6 behavior could be objectively classified as the kind of behavior that would seriously affect the 7 psychological or emotional well-being of a reasonable person of [plaintiff's age]. The reasonable 8 person of [plaintiff's age] is simply one of normal sensitivity and emotional make-up.

10 Comment

11 This instruction can be used if the court wishes to provide a more detailed instruction on 12 what constitutes a hostile work environment than those set forth in Instructions 8.1.3 and 8.1.4.
13 This instruction is substantively identical to the definition of hostile work environment in Title VII
14 cases. See Instruction 5.2.1.

8.2.2 ADEA Definitions — Constructive Discharge

Model

In this case, to show that [he/she] was subjected to an adverse “tangible employment action,” [plaintiff] claims that [he/she] was forced to resign due to conduct that discriminated against [him/her] on the basis of [plaintiff’s] age. Such a forced resignation, if proven, is called a “constructive discharge.” To prove that [he/she] was subjected to a constructive discharge, [plaintiff] must prove that working conditions became so intolerable that a reasonable person in the employee’s position would have felt compelled to resign.

Comment

In ADEA cases (as in Title VII cases, see Comment 5.2.2), courts in the Third Circuit “employ an objective test to determine whether an employee can recover on a claim of constructive discharge.... Specifically, a court must determine ‘whether a reasonable jury could find that the [employer] permitted conditions so unpleasant or difficult that a reasonable person would have felt compelled to resign.’” Duffy v. Paper Magic Group, Inc., 265 F.3d 163, 167 (3d Cir. 2001). Instruction 8.2.2 is substantively identical to the constructive discharge instruction for Title VII actions. See Instruction 5.2.2.

This instruction can be used when the plaintiff was not fired but resigned, and claims that she nonetheless suffered an adverse employment action because she was constructively discharged due to an adverse action or actions that were sanctioned by her employer. This instruction is designed for use with either Instruction 8.1.1 or Instruction 8.1.2. Assuming that the Title VII framework concerning employer liability for harassment applies to ADEA actions, the employer’s ability to assert an Ellerth/Faragher affirmative defense in a constructive discharge case will depend on whether the constructive discharge resulted from actions that were sanctioned by the employer. See Pennsylvania State Police v. Suders, 542 U.S. 129, 140-41 (2004) (“[A]n employer does not have recourse to the Ellerth/Faragher affirmative defense when a supervisor’s official act precipitates the constructive discharge; absent such a ‘tangible employment action,’ however, the defense is available to the employer whose supervisors are charged with harassment.”); see also Comment 5.1.5.

8.3.1 Bona Fide Occupational Qualification

8.3.1 ADEA Defenses — Bona Fide Occupational Qualification

Model

If you find that [plaintiff] has established by a preponderance of the evidence that [defendant] [describe employment action] because of [his/her] age, then you must consider [defendant's] defense that its age limitation is a bona fide occupational qualification.

In order to avoid liability for intentional discrimination on the basis of this contention, [defendant] must prove both of the following elements by a preponderance of the evidence:

First: That the occupational qualification relied upon by [defendant] is reasonably necessary for the normal operation of [defendant's] business.

Second: That [defendant] either had reasonable cause to believe that all or substantially all persons over the age qualification would be unable to perform the job safely and efficiently, or that it was impossible or highly impractical to consider the necessary qualifications of each older employee. [Defendant's] belief should be evaluated in light of all the circumstances in the case, to determine whether it has a reasonable basis in fact.

If you find that [defendant] has proved these two elements by a preponderance of the evidence, then you must find for [defendant].

Comment

Section 4(f)(1) of the ADEA provides that it is not unlawful for an employer to take an action otherwise prohibited by the Act if “age is a bona fide occupational qualification reasonably necessary to the normal operation of the particular business.” 29 U.S.C. § 629(f)(1). This language is identical to that provided in Title VII. Accordingly, the instruction is substantively identical to Instruction 5.3.1, which covers the BFOQ defense in Title VII cases.

In Western Airlines v. Criswell, 472 U.S. 400, 410 (1985), the Court declared that the BFOQ defense is an “extremely narrow” exception; it held that the defense did not justify the employer’s plan to retire members of commercial airline flight crews when they reached 60 years of age. The Criswell Court described the BFOQ defense applicable in ADEA actions in the following passage:

An employer asserting a BFOQ defense has the burden of proving that (1) the age limit is reasonably necessary to the essence of the business, and either (2) that all or substantially all individuals excluded from the job involved are in fact disqualified, or (3) that some of the individuals so excluded possess a disqualifying trait that cannot be ascertained except by reference to age. If the employer’s objective in asserting a BFOQ is the goal of public safety, the employer must prove that the challenged practice does indeed effectuate that

1 goal and that there is no acceptable alternative which would better advance it or equally
2 advance it with less discriminatory impact.

3 The Criswell Court made it clear that the BFOQ defense is an affirmative defense; the burden of 4 establishing its elements is on the defendant.

8.3.2 ADEA Defenses — Bona Fide Seniority System

Model

If you find that [plaintiff] has established by a preponderance of the evidence that [defendant] [describe employment action] because of [plaintiff's] age, then you must consider [defendant's] defense that it was applying the terms of a good faith seniority system. An employer can lawfully use a seniority system in making employment decisions unless the seniority rules were designed and used to discriminate against older workers. Put another way, if the seniority rules are legitimate and not designed to discriminate, then the rules are lawful and can be used to make employment decisions.

To establish the defense of a good faith seniority system, [defendant] must prove both of the following by a preponderance of the evidence:

First: That the seniority system used the length of service of employees, and not the age of the employees, as the primary basis for giving available job opportunities to its workers.

Second: That [defendant's] [challenged employment action] was consistent with its seniority system.

If you find that [defendant] has proved these two elements by a preponderance of the evidence, then you must find for [defendant].

Comment

The ADEA permits disparate treatment “to observe the terms of a bona fide seniority system that is not intended to evade the purposes of this Act, except that no such seniority system shall require or permit the involuntary retirement of any individual . . . because of the age of such individual.” 29 U.S.C. § 623(f)(2)(A). Thus the seniority system will be invalid if it is dependent on age rather than seniority. See also Hazen Paper Co. v. Biggins, 507 U.S. 604, 616 (1993) (rejecting a claim of age discrimination to the extent the challenged employment practice was based on the plaintiff's seniority not his age). .

The Supreme Court has held that challenges to the effects of bona fide seniority systems may not be based upon assertions of disparate impact; rather, a plaintiff must prove intentional discrimination. See International Brotherhood of Teamsters v. United States, 431 U.S. 324, 352-56 (1977). See also Hiatt v. Union Pacific R.R., 65 F.3d 838, 842 (10th Cir. 1995) (challenges of age discrimination to bona fide seniority systems must rest upon claim of disparate treatment rather than disparate impact).

8.3.3 ADEA Defenses — Waiver

Model

If you find that [plaintiff] has established by a preponderance of the evidence that [defendant] [describe employment action] because of [plaintiff's] age, then you must consider the defense alleged by [defendant] that [plaintiff] knowingly and voluntarily consented to a waiver of [plaintiff's] ADEA claims.

Federal law permits [plaintiff] to waive ADEA rights provided that, at a minimum, [defendant] proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the following safeguards are met:

1. The waiver is part of an agreement between [plaintiff] and [defendant] that is written in a way that is intended to be understood by [plaintiff] or by the average individual eligible to participate;
2. The waiver specifically refers to rights or claims arising out of the Age Discrimination in Employment Act;
3. [Plaintiff] did not waive rights or claims that may arise after the date the waiver was executed;
4. [Plaintiff] waived rights under the ADEA in exchange for something of value beyond that to which [he/she] was already entitled; and
5. [Plaintiff] was advised in writing to consult an attorney before executing the waiver agreement.

[In this case, [plaintiff] has presented evidence challenging the validity of this waiver. Specifically [describe plaintiff's evidence challenging waiver]. It is for you to determine whether or not the waiver was knowing and voluntary. In doing so, you must consider all the circumstances surrounding the signing of the waiver. [Defendant] has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that [plaintiff's] waiver of ADEA rights was knowing and voluntary. The fact that the agreement complies with the minimum standards of Federal law does not necessarily mean that the waiver was knowing and voluntary.]

Comment

The Older Workers Benefit Protection Act (OWBPA) permits workers to sign releases of ADEA claims, provided the waiver is knowing and voluntary and the minimum standards of the

8.3.3 Waiver

OWBPA are met. 29 U.S.C. § 626(f)(1).²¹ The proponent of the release has the burden to prove that the minimum statutory requirements for the release have been satisfied. See Ruehl v. Viacom, Inc., 500 F.3d 375, 381 (3d Cir. 2007) (waiver invalid where employer could not establish that the employee was provided the necessary information required by the OWBPA: “Having the employee say he was informed in writing — when he was not — does not satisfy the OWBPA requirements.”) (emphasis in original). The minimum statutory requirements for a valid waiver are as follows:

(A) the waiver is part of an agreement between the individual and the employer that is written in a manner calculated to be understood by such individual, or by the average individual eligible to participate;

(B) the waiver specifically refers to rights or claims arising under [the ADEA];

(C) the individual does not waive rights or claims that may arise after the date the waiver is executed;

(D) the individual waives rights or claims only in exchange for consideration in addition to anything of value to which the individual already is entitled;

(E) the individual is advised in writing to consult an attorney prior to executing the agreement.

29 U.S.C. § 626(f)(1). See Lewis and Norman, Employment Discrimination 456-57 (2d ed. 2004) for a discussion of the statutory requirements.

The statutory factors are minimum requirements. See Wastak v. Lehigh Valley Health Network, 342 F.3d 281, 295, n.8 (3d Cir. 2003) (noting that the OWBPA establishes “a floor, not a ceiling”). Whether a waiver is knowing and voluntary is determined by a totality of the circumstances. See Bennett v. Coors Brewing Co., 189 F.3d 1221, 1229 (10th Cir. 1999) (noting that the statutory factors governing a waiver under OWBPA are minimum requirements, and holding that non-statutory factors such as fraud and duress may render an ADEA waiver not knowing and voluntary); Griffin v. Kraft General Foods, Inc., 62 F.3d 368, 373-74 (11th Cir. 1995) (validity of waiver of ADEA claims must be determined under the totality of the circumstances). But if the waiver agreement on its face meets the minimum statutory requirements of OWBPA, ²¹ “It is hornbook law that employers can require terminated employees to release claims in exchange for benefits to which they would not otherwise be entitled.” E.E.O.C. v. Allstate Ins. Co., 778 F.3d 444, 449 (3d Cir. 2015). In Allstate, the employer conditioned its conversion of terminated at-will employees into independent contractors on the employees’ signing releases of all existing claims (including but not limited to discrimination claims). The Court of Appeals rejected the EEOC’s argument that there was inadequate consideration for such releases, reasoning that there was no “good reason why an employer cannot require a release of discrimination claims by a terminated employee in exchange for a new business relationship with the employer.” Allstate, 778 F.3d at 451.

8.3.3 Waiver

1 the issue of whether or not the plaintiff has given a knowing and voluntary consent to a waiver of 2 ADEA claims will only reach the jury if the plaintiff has come forward with specific evidence
3 sufficient to raise a question as to the validity of the waiver. The court in Pierce v. Atchison Topeka
4 & Santa Fe Ry., 110 F.3d 431, 438 (7th Cir. 1997), explained why the plaintiff has a burden of 5 production when contending that a release conforming with the statute was not knowing and 6 voluntary:

7 To place upon the employer the burden of demonstrating that an otherwise unambiguous
8 release of claims was not signed knowingly and voluntarily risks undermining the 9 usefulness of waivers by clouding them in uncertainty. This danger is compounded by the 10 difficulty of demonstrating that someone's actions were knowing and voluntary, an 11 assumption about human behavior which the law typically indulges as a matter of faith.
12

13 This line of reasoning has force. . . . [W]e believe that the concerns it reflects are adequately
14 addressed by placing the burden of production, rather than the burden of proof, on the party
15 who . . . seeks to invalidate a waiver of federal rights. Such a rule does not mean that a 16 claim that a release was not executed knowingly and voluntarily will necessarily reach a 17 jury. The plaintiff must come forward with specific evidence sufficient to raise a question
18 as to the validity of the release A bald assertion of misrepresentation by the employer,
19 standing alone, is legally insufficient. Moreover, certain factors, such as the participation 20 of an attorney in negotiating the release, will give rise to a presumption that the waiver was 21 knowing and voluntary. As for the difficulty of establishing that an employee did not act 22 knowingly and voluntarily, a burden which some have likened to "proving a negative," we 23 believe that this difficulty is minimized by requiring the employee to produce specific 24 evidence of factors that vitiated his consent to the release.

26 The court in Pierce emphasized—as does the instruction—that while the plaintiff has a 27 burden of production when the release conforms to minimum statutory requirements, it is the 28 defendant's burden to prove that the release was knowing and voluntary once the plaintiff's burden 29 of production is met.

30 An employer who obtains a waiver through a nonconforming release cannot defeat an 31 ADEA claim simply because the plaintiff did not tender back the consideration paid in exchange
32 for the waiver. Oubre v. Entergy Operations, Inc., 522 U.S. 422, 427-28 (1998).

8.4.1 General Compensatory Damages

8.4.1 ADEA Damages — General Compensatory Damages

No Instruction

Comment

General compensatory damages, such as for pain and suffering, are not recoverable in ADEA actions. Rogers v. Exxon Research and Engineering Co., 550 F.2d 834, 842 (3d Cir. 1977) (relying on legislative history tying recovery under the ADEA to that provided by the Fair Labor Standards Act, and not Title VII; holding that “damages for pain and suffering or emotional distress cannot properly be awarded in ADEA cases”), overruled on other grounds by Holliday v. Ketchum, MacLeod & Grove, Inc., 584 F.2d 1221 (3d Cir. 1978) (en banc); Haskell v. Kaman Corp., 743 F.2d 113, 120-21 (2d Cir. 1984) (“plaintiffs are not entitled to recovery for emotional distress in ADEA actions”).

The ADEA mandates an award for back pay and liquidated damages, and permits an award for front pay. See Instructions 8.4.2 - 8.4.4 for instructions covering these awards.

8.4.2. ADEA Damages — Back Pay

Model

If you find that [defendant] intentionally discriminated against [plaintiff] in [describe employment action] [plaintiff], then you must determine the amount of damages that [defendant's] actions have caused [plaintiff]. [Plaintiff] has the burden of proving damages by a preponderance of the evidence.

You must award as actual damages an amount that reasonably compensates [plaintiff] for any lost wages and benefits, taking into consideration any increases in salary and benefits, including pension, that [plaintiff] would have received from [defendant] had [plaintiff] not been the subject of [defendant's] intentional discrimination.

Back pay damages, if any, apply from the time [plaintiff] was [describe adverse employment action] until the date of your verdict.

You must reduce any award by the amount of the expenses that [plaintiff] would have incurred in making those earnings.

If you award back pay, you are instructed to deduct from the back pay figure whatever wages [plaintiff] has obtained from other employment during this period. However, please note that you should not deduct social security benefits, unemployment compensation and pension benefits from an award of back pay.

[You are further instructed that [plaintiff] has a duty to mitigate [his/her] damages--that is [plaintiff] is required to make reasonable efforts under the circumstances to reduce [his/her] damages. It is [defendant's] burden to prove that [plaintiff] has failed to mitigate. So if [defendant] persuades you, by a preponderance of the evidence, that [plaintiff] failed to obtain substantially equivalent job opportunities that were reasonably available to [him/ her], you must reduce the award of damages by the amount of the wages that [plaintiff] reasonably would have earned if [he/she] had obtained those opportunities.]

[In assessing damages, you must not consider attorney fees or the costs of litigating this case. Attorney fees and costs, if relevant at all, are for the court and not the jury to determine. Therefore, attorney fees and costs should play no part in your calculation of any damages.]

[Add the following instruction if the employer claims “after-acquired evidence” of misconduct by the plaintiff:

[Defendant] contends that it would have made the same decision to [describe employment decision] [plaintiff] because of conduct that [defendant] discovered after it made the employment decision. Specifically, [defendant] claims that when it became aware of the [describe the after-discovered misconduct], [defendant] would have made the decision at that point had it not been made previously.

If [defendant] proves by a preponderance of the evidence that it would have made the same decision and would have [describe employment decision] [plaintiff] because of [describe after-discovered evidence], you must limit any award of back pay to the date [defendant] would have made the decision to [describe employment decision] [plaintiff] as a result of the after-acquired information.]

Comment

Back pay awards are mandatory under the ADEA after a finding of discrimination; the ADEA incorporates damages provisions from the Fair Labor Standards Act providing that back pay “shall” be awarded. Accordingly, while back pay is an equitable remedy under some statutes (such as Title VII), back pay is a damages remedy under the ADEA, and therefore the parties have a right to a jury trial on questions of back pay. See Lorillard v. Pons, 434 U.S. 575, 584 (1978) (noting that the ADEA incorporates the FLSA provision that employers “shall be liable” for amounts deemed unpaid minimum wages or overtime compensation, while under Title VII, the availability of backpay is a matter of equitable discretion, and holding that in a private action under the ADEA a trial by jury is available where sought by one of the parties); Anastasio v. Schering Corp., 838 F.2d 701 (3d Cir. 1988) (distinguishing the ADEA, where back pay is a mandatory element of damages, from the discretionary back pay remedy in Title VII).

In McKennon v. Nashville Banner Publishing Co., 513 U.S. 352, 362 (1995), the Court held that if an employer discharges an employee for a discriminatory reason, later-discovered evidence that the employer could have used to discharge the employee for a legitimate reason does not immunize the employer from liability. However, the employer in such a circumstance does not have to offer reinstatement or front pay and only has to provide back pay “from the date of the unlawful discharge to the date the new information was discovered.” 513 U.S. at 362. See also Mardell v. Harleysville Life Ins. Co., 65 F.3d 1072, 1073 (3d Cir. 1995) (stating that “after-acquired evidence may be used to limit the remedies available to a plaintiff where the employer can first establish that the wrongdoing was of such severity that the employee in fact would have been terminated on those grounds alone if the employer had known of it at the time of the discharge.”). Both McKennon and Mardell observe that the defendant has the burden of showing that it would have made the same employment decision when it became aware of the post-decision evidence of the employee’s misconduct.

Under the ADEA, collateral benefits such as unemployment compensation, pension benefits and social security benefits are not to be deducted from a back pay award. Berndt v. Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Sales, Inc., 789 F.2d 253 (3d Cir. 1986) (unemployment compensation is not to be deducted from a back pay award in an ADEA action); Maxfield v. Sinclair Int’l, 766 F.2d 788 (3d Cir. 1985) (social security benefits cannot be offset as an award of backpay is a mandatory element of damages under the ADEA). In contrast, courts have held that the ADEA does require interim earnings to be deducted from back pay awards. Id. The instruction reflects these legal standards.

8.4.2 Back Pay

1 Attorney Fees and Costs

2 There appears to be no uniform practice regarding the use of an instruction that warns the 3 jury against speculation on attorney fees and costs. In Collins v. Alco Parking Corp., 448 F.3d 652
4 (3d Cir. 2006), the district court gave the following instruction: “You are instructed that if plaintiff
5 wins on his claim, he may be entitled to an award of attorney fees and costs over and above what 6 you award as damages. It is my duty to decide whether to award attorney fees and costs, and if so,
7 how much. Therefore, attorney fees and costs should play no part in your calculation of any 8 damages.” Id. at 656-57. The Court of Appeals held that the plaintiff had not properly objected
9 to the instruction, and, reviewing for plain error, found none: “We need not and do not decide now
10 whether a district court commits error by informing a jury about the availability of attorney fees
11 in an ADEA case. Assuming arguendo that an error occurred, such error is not plain, for two 12 reasons.” Id. at 657. First, “it is not ‘obvious’ or ‘plain’ that an instruction directing the jury not 13 to consider attorney fees” is irrelevant or prejudicial; “it is at least arguable that a jury tasked with 14 computing damages might, absent information that the Court has discretion to award attorney fees 15 at a later stage, seek to compensate a sympathetic plaintiff for the expense of litigation.” Id.
16 Second, it is implausible “that the jury, in order to eliminate the chance that Collins might be 17 awarded attorney fees, took the disproportionate step of returning a verdict against him even 18 though it believed he was the victim of age discrimination, notwithstanding the District Court’s 19 clear instructions to the contrary.” Id.; see also id. at 658 (distinguishing Fisher v. City of 20 Memphis, 234 F.3d 312, 319 (6th Cir. 2000), and Brooks v. Cook, 938 F.2d 1048, 1051 (9th Cir.
21 1991)).

8.4.3. ADEA Damages — Liquidated Damages

Model

If you find that [plaintiff] is entitled to recover damages for lost wages or benefits, then I will also ask you to decide a further question: whether [defendant’s] conduct was willful. For purposes of your answer to that question, [plaintiff] has the burden of proving willfulness by a preponderance of the evidence.

You must find [defendant’s] violation of the ADEA to be willful if [defendant] knew or showed reckless disregard for whether the [challenged action] was prohibited by the law. To establish willfulness it is not enough to show that [defendant] acted negligently. If you find that [defendant] did not know, or knew only that the law was potentially applicable, and did not act in reckless disregard as to whether its conduct was prohibited by the law, then [defendant’s] conduct was not willful.

Comment

Punitive damages are not available under the ADEA. Rogers v. Exxon Research and Engineering Co., 550 F.2d 834, 842 (3d Cir. 1977), overruled on other grounds by Holliday v. Ketchum, MacLeod & Grove, Inc., 584 F.2d 1221 (3d Cir. 1978) (en banc). 29 U.S.C. § 626(b) instead incorporates the liquidated damages provision of the Fair Labor Standards Act, 29 U.S.C. § 216(b). The statute provides that doubling of damages is mandatory if there is a finding that the defendant willfully violated the law.²² Instruction 8.4.3 does not tell the jury the reason it is being asked to determine willfulness; if the jury finds willfulness, then the court doubles the damages based on the jury’s finding. The concern is that, if the jury knows the effect of the willfulness determination, it might adjust its damages assessment in light of that information. Instructions for use in four other circuits similarly do not tell the jury the reason it is being asked to determine willfulness. See Seventh Circuit Instruction 3.06 (2017); Eighth Circuit Instruction 6.20 (2023); Ninth Circuit Instruction 11.14 (2024); Eleventh Circuit Instruction 4.10 (2024). But see Fifth Circuit Instruction 11.18 (2020) (instructing jury that “[a] plaintiff who proves that [his/her] [former] employer acted willfully in violating the ADEA is entitled to additional damages” – but without specifying the measure of those additional damages).

In Trans World Airlines v. Thurston, 469 U.S. 111, 128 (1985), the Court held that willfulness must be found under the ADEA if the employer either knew or showed reckless disregard of the fact that its conduct was prohibited by the statute. The challenged action in Thurston was the company-wide implementation of a policy that was found to violate the ADEA.

²² Cf. Marrow v. Allstate Sec. & Investigative Services, Inc., 167 F. Supp. 2d 838, 841 (E.D. Pa. 2001) (holding that punitive damages are available for claims of retaliation under the Equal Pay Act and Fair Labor Standards Act, and distinguishing ADEA actions, where punitive damages are not available for any claim).

8.4.3 Liquidated Damages

1 Thurston, 469 U.S. at 114-15. The Court held that a willful violation could not be found under the 2 circumstances, as the company had sought advice of counsel in advance of the implementation of 3 the policy, and was told that the policy would not violate the ADEA. Id. at 130.

4 The same “knowing/reckless disregard” test of willfulness applies to acts of intentional
5 discrimination against individuals.

6 Hazen Paper Co., v. Biggins, 507 U.S. 604 (1993) (rejecting, in a case involving a 7 discrete action against a single employee, any requirement that defendant’s action must be 8 “outrageous” before liquidated damages could be imposed). Still, liquidated damages are not 9 necessarily automatic in all cases in which a discrete act was found to be intentional age
10 discrimination. As the Court declared in Hazen Paper:

11 It is not true that an employer who knowingly relies on age in reaching its decision 12 invariably commits a knowing or reckless violation of the ADEA. The ADEA is not an 13 unqualified prohibition on the use of age in employment decisions, but affords the 14 employer a “bona fide occupational qualification” defense, and exempts certain subject 15 matters and persons, see, e. g., § 623(f)(2) (exemption for bona fide seniority systems and 16 employee benefit plans); § 631(c) (exemption for bona fide executives and high 17 policymakers). If an employer incorrectly but in good faith and nonrecklessly believes 18 that the statute permits a particular age-based decision, then liquidated damages should 19 not be imposed.

20 Nor do we see how the instant case can be distinguished from Thurston . . . The 21 only distinction between Thurston and the case before us is the existence of formal 22 discrimination. Age entered into the employment decision there through a formal and 23 publicized policy, and not as an undisclosed factor motivating the employer on an ad hoc 24 basis, which is what respondent alleges occurred here. But surely an employer’s 25 reluctance to acknowledge its reliance on the forbidden factor should not cut against 26 imposing a penalty. It would be a wholly circular and self-defeating interpretation of the 27 ADEA to hold that, in cases where an employer more likely knows its conduct to be 28 illegal, knowledge alone does not suffice for liquidated damages.

29 We therefore reaffirm that the Thurston definition of “willful” -- that the 30 employer either knew or showed reckless disregard for the matter of whether its conduct 31 was prohibited by the statute -- applies to all disparate treatment cases under the ADEA.
32 Once a “willful” violation has been shown, the employee need not additionally 33 demonstrate that the employer’s conduct was outrageous, or provide direct evidence of 34 the employer’s motivation, or prove that age was the predominant, rather than a 35 determinative, factor in the employment decision.

36 507 U.S. at 616. Accordingly, the instruction does not include any requirement that the 37 defendant’s conduct must have been outrageous. See Starceski v. Westinghouse Elec. Corp., 54
38 F.3d 1089, 1099, n.2 (3d Cir. 1995) (noting that the Third Circuit’s “outrageousness”
39 requirement from Dreyer v. ARCO Chem. Co., 801 F.2d 651, 656-57 (1986) had been effectively 40 overruled by Hazen).

8.4.3 Liquidated Damages

1 The amount of damages to be doubled under the ADEA liquidated damages provision
2 does not include front pay. Blum v. Witco Chem. Corp., 829 F.2d 367, 373 (3d Cir. 1987) (noting 3 that a front pay award “is the monetary equivalent of the equitable remedy of reinstatement” and 4 therefore is not part of the “wages” that are to be doubled under the terms of the statute).

5 Liquidated damages are of course not available in disparate impact cases, as liquidated
6 damages are premised on a knowing or reckless disregard of the law. In contrast, disparate 7 impact liability is not dependent on a knowing or intentional violation.

8 In Potence v. Hazleton Area School District, 357 F.3d 366 (3d Cir. 2004), the court held
9 that the ADEA authorizes the imposition of liquidated damages against government employers
10 who engage in willful age discrimination.

8.4.4. ADEA Damages — Front Pay

Model

You may determine and award separately a monetary amount equal to the present value of any future wages and benefits that [plaintiff] would reasonably have earned from [defendant] had [plaintiff] not [describe adverse employment action] for the period from the date of your verdict through a reasonable period of time in the future. From this figure you must subtract the amount of earnings and benefits [plaintiff] will receive from other employment during that time. [Plaintiff] has the burden of proving these damages by a preponderance of the evidence.

[If you find that [plaintiff] is entitled to recovery of future earnings from [defendant], then you must reduce any award by the amount of the expenses that [plaintiff] would have incurred in making those earnings.]

You must also reduce any award to its present value by considering the interest that [plaintiff] could earn on the amount of the award if [he/she] made a relatively risk-free investment. The reason you must make this reduction is because an award of an amount representing future loss of earnings is more valuable to [plaintiff] if [he/she] receives it today than if it were received at the time in the future when it would have been earned. It is more valuable because [plaintiff] can earn interest on it for the period of time between the date of the award and the date [he/she] would have earned the money. So you should decrease the amount of any award for loss of future earnings by the amount of interest that [plaintiff] can earn on that amount in the future.

[Add the following instruction if defendant claims “after-acquired evidence” of misconduct by the plaintiff:]

[Defendant] contends that it would have made the same decision to [describe employment decision] [plaintiff] because of conduct that it discovered after it made the employment decision. Specifically, [defendant] claims that when it became aware of the [describe the after-discovered misconduct], it would have made the decision at that point had it not been made previously.

If [defendant] proves by a preponderance of the evidence that it would have made the same decision and would have [describe employment decision] [plaintiff] because of [describe after-discovered evidence], then you may not award [plaintiff] any amount for wages that would have been received from [defendant] in the future.]

Comment

8.4.4 Front Pay

1 Front pay may be awarded if reinstatement is not possible. In Maxfield v. Sinclair Int'l,
2 766 F.2d 788, 795-96 (3d Cir. 1985), the court rejected the defendant's argument that an award
3 of front pay is not permitted in an ADEA action, and discussed the role of a front pay award in 4 the following passage:

5 Although this court has not yet spoken on whether an award of future lost
6 earnings is precluded by the ADEA, . . . the line of cases we find most persuasive 7 allows such an award. As Judge Weinfeld wrote in Koyen v. Consolidated Edison Co. of 8 New York, 560 F. Supp. 1161, 1168 (S.D.N.Y. 1983), "To deny [authority to grant front 9 pay] would defeat a purpose of the Act to make a victim of discrimination 'whole' and to 10 restore him to the economic position he would have occupied but for the unlawful 11 conduct of his employer."

12 Moreover, it is significant that whereas the FLSA has no provision for future
13 damages, when Congress enacted the ADEA it added the following provision to the 14 remedies taken from the FLSA:

15 In any action brought to enforce this chapter, the court shall have jurisdiction to 16 grant such legal or equitable relief as may be appropriate to effectuate the 17 purposes of this chapter, including without limitation judgments compelling 18 employment, reinstatement or promotion, or enforcing the liability for amounts 19 deemed to be unpaid minimum wages or overtime compensation under this 20 section.

21 29 U.S.C. § 626(b). The inclusion of equitable relief strengthens the conclusion that 22 Congress intended victims of age discrimination to be made whole by restoring them to 23 the position they would have been in had the discrimination never occurred.

24 Front pay, an award for future earnings, is sometimes needed to achieve that 25 purpose. Ordinarily, an employee would be made whole by a backpay award coupled 26 with an order for reinstatement. Reinstatement is the preferred remedy to avoid future lost
27 earnings, but reinstatement may not be feasible in all cases. There may be no position 28 available at the time of judgment or the relationship between the parties may have been 29 so damaged by animosity that reinstatement is impracticable. In such circumstances, the 30 remedial purpose of the statute would be thwarted and plaintiff would suffer irreparable
31 harm if front pay were not available as an alternate remedy to reinstatement. Since 32 reinstatement is an equitable remedy, it is the district court that should decide whether 33 reinstatement is feasible. Of course the amount of damages available as front pay is a 34 jury question. (Emphasis added).

35 Because front pay is essentially an equitable remedy in lieu of reinstatement, the 36 plaintiff's entitlement to front pay is an issue for the court, not the jury. But in Maxfield, supra, 37 the court declared that once the court finds that reinstatement is not feasible, it is for the jury to 38 determine the amount of "damages" available as front pay. Thus, it appears in the Third Circuit

8.4.4 Front Pay

1 that the parties have the right to a jury trial to determine the amount of front pay — though this is 2 not the case in actions brought under Title VII or Section 1981.

8.4.5 ADEA Damages — Nominal Damages

Model

If you return a verdict for [plaintiff], but [plaintiff] has failed to prove actual injury and therefore is not entitled to damages, then you must award nominal damages of $ 1.00.

A person whose federal rights were violated is entitled to a recognition of that violation, even if [he] suffered no compensable injury. Nominal damages (of $1.00) are designed to acknowledge the deprivation of a federal right, even where no compensable injury occurred.

However, if you find compensable injury, you must award damages for lost wages or benefits (as I instructed you), rather than nominal damages.

Comment

There is no Third Circuit case law on the availability of nominal damages in an ADEA case. But it appears that an award of nominal damages in an ADEA action might be justified in an extraordinary case, and so a pattern instruction is provided. The Eighth Circuit Committee Comment on a nominal damage instruction in an ADEA case opines that “[n]ominal damages normally are not appropriate in ADEA cases” and explains as follows:

Recoverable damages in ADEA cases normally are limited to lost wages and benefits and in most ADEA cases, it will be undisputed that the plaintiff has some actual damages. Although case law does not clearly authorize this remedy in age discrimination cases, a nominal damage instruction may be considered in appropriate cases, and Model Instruction 5.02B, supra, should be used. Most cases that allow nominal damages just assume they are permissible without much discussion of the issue. See e.g., Drez v. E.R. Squibb & Sons, Inc., 674 F. Supp. 1432, 1438 (D. Kan. 1987) (ADEA); Graefenhain v. Pabst Brewing Co., 670 F. Supp. 1415, 1416 (E.D. Wis. 1987) (ADEA).
